

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

The Poet's design in this Satire, which deservedly holds the first rank among all performances of the kind, is to represent the various wishes and desires of mankind, and to shew the folly of them. He mentions riches, honours, eloquence, fame for martial achievements, long life, and beauty, and gives instances of their having proved ruinous to the possessors of

* This Satire has been always exceedingly admired ; bishop Burnet goes so far, as to recommend it (together with Persius) to the serious perusal and practice of the divines in his diocese, as the best common places for their sermons, as the store-houses and magazines of moral virtues, from whence they may draw out, as they have occasion, all manner of assistance for the accomplishment of a virtuous life. The tenth Satire (says Crusius in his Lives of the Roman Poets) is inimitable for the excellence of its morality, and sublime sentiments.

them. He concludes, therefore, that we should leave it to the gods to make a choice for us, they knowing what is most for our good. All that we can safely ask, is, health of body and mind: possessed of these, we have enough to make us happy, and therefore it is not much matter what we want besides.

IN all lands, which are from Gades to The East and the Ganges, few can distinguish True good things, and those greatly different from them,

Or desire? what do you contrive so prosperously, that you 5

— Ganges.] The greatest river in the East, dividing India into two parts.

3—4. Cloud of error.] That veil of darkness and ignorance which is over the human mind, and hides from it, as it were, the faculty of perceiving our real and best interests, as distinguished from those which are deceitful and imaginary.

4. What, with reason, &c.] According to the rules of right and sober reason.

5. So prosperously, &c.] Tam dextro pede—on so prosperous a footing—with ever such hope and prospect of success, that you may not repent your endeavour (conatûs) and pains to accomplish it, and of your desires and wishes being fully completed and answered ?—votique peracti.

The right and left were ominous—dexter -a -um, therefore, signifies lucky, favourable, fortunate, propitious—as lævus -a -um, unlucky, inconvenient, unseasonable.

Tam dextro pede is equivalent to tam fausto—secundo—prospero pede.

I pede fausto—go on and prosper. Hor. Lib. ii. Epist. ii. l. 37. So Virg. Æn. viii. l. 302.

Et nos & tua dexter adi pede sacra secundo.

“ Approach us, and thy sacred rites, with thy favourable

Pes—lit. a foot, that member of the body on which we stand—sometimes means the foundation of any thing—a plot for building;—so, in a moral sense, those conceptions and contrivances of the mind, which are the foundations of human action, on which men build for profit or happiness:—this seems to be its meaning here.

7. The easy gods, &c.] The gods, by yielding to the prayers and wishes of mankind, have often occasioned their ruin, by granting such things, as, in the end, proved hurtful. So that, in truth, men, by wishing for what appeared to them desirable, have, in effect, themselves wished their own destruction.

8. By the gown, &c.] Toga, here, being opposed to militia, may allude to the gown worn by the senators and magistrates of Rome; and so, by meton. signify their civil offices in the government of the state.—q. d. Many have wished for a share in the government and administration of civil affairs, others for high rank and posts of command in the army, each of which have been

May not repent of your endeavour, and of your accomplished wish?

The easy gods have overturned whole houses, themselves
Wishing it: things hurtful by the gown, hurtful by warfare, Are asked: a fluent copiousness of speech to many
And their own eloquence is deadly.—He, to his strength 10
Trusting, and to his wonderful arms, perished.

But money, heap'd together with too much care, destroys
More, and an income exceeding all patrimonies,
As much as a British whale is greater than dolphins.
Therefore in direful times, and by the command of Nero, 15
A whole troop Longinus, and the large gardens of wealthy Seneca,

been attended with damage to those who have eagerly sought after them.

9. A fluent copiousness, &c.] Many covet a great degree of eloquence; but how fatal has this proved to possessors of it! Witness Demosthenes and Cicero, who both came to violent deaths;—the former driven, by the malice of his enemies, to poison himself; the latter slain by order of M. Antony. See Keyser's Travels, vol. ii. p. 342, note.

10. To his strength, &c.] Alluding to Milo, the famous wrestler, born at Croton, in Italy, who, presuming too much on his great strength, would try whether he could not rend asunder a tree which was cleft as it grew in the forest; it yielded at first to his violence, but it closed presently again, and, catching his hands, held him till the wolves devoured him.

12. Destroys.] Lit. strangles. Met. ruins, destroys.

The poet is here shewing, that, of all things which prove ruinous to the possessors, money, and especially an overgrown fortune, is one of the most fatal—and yet, with what care is this heaped together!

13. Exceeding, &c.] i. e. Beyond the rate of a common fortune.

14. A British whale.] A whale found in the British seas.

16. Longinus.] Cassius Longinus, put to death by Nero: his pretended crime was, that he had, in his chamber, an image of Cassius, one of Julius Cæsar's murderers; but that which really made him a delinquent, was his great wealth, which the emperor seized.

— Seneca, &c.] Tutor to Nero—supposed to be one in Piso's conspiracy, but put to death for his great riches. Sylvanus the tribune, by order of Nero, ſurrounded Seneca's magnificent villa, near Rome, with a troop of ſoldiers, and then ſent in a centurion to acquaint him with the emperor's orders, that he ſhould put himſelf to death. On the receipt of this, he opened the veins of his arms and legs, then was put into a hot bath, but this not finiſhing him, he drank poiſon.

17. Surrounded.] Beſet—encompaſſed.

— Laterani.] Plautius Lateranus had a ſumptuous palace, in which he was beſet by order of Nero, and killed ſo ſuddenly, by Thurius the tribune, that he had not a moment's time allowed him to take leave of his children and family. He had been deſigned conſul.

18. The ſoldier, &c.] Cœnaculum ſignifies a place to ſup in—an upper chamber—alſo a garret, a coekloſt in the top of the houſe, commonly let to poor people, the inhabitants of which were too poor to run any riſque of the emperor's ſending ſoldiers to murder them for what they have.

19. Tho' you ſhould carry, &c.] Though not ſo rich as to become an object of the emperor's avarice and cruelty, yet you can't travel by night, with the paltry charge of a little ſilver plate, without fear of your life from robbers, who may either ſtab you with a ſword, or knock you down with a bludgeon, in order to rob you.

20. Pole.] Contus ſignifies a long pole or ſtaff—alſo a weapon, wherewith they uſed to fight beaſts upon the ſtage. It is probable that the robbers about Rome armed themſelves with theſe, as ourſ. about London, arm themſelves with large ſticks or bludgeons.

21. Tremble, &c.] They are alarmed at the leaſt appearance of any thing moving near them, even the trembling and nodding of a bulruſh, when its ſhadow appears by moon-light.

SAT. X. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 7

Surrounded, and besieged the stately buildings of the Laterani—

The soldier seldom comes into a garret.

Tho' you should carry a few small vessels of pure silver, Going on a journey by night, you will fear the sword and the pole, 20

And tremble at the shadow of a reed moved, by moon-light.

AN EMPTY TRAVELLER WILL SING BEFORE A ROBBER.

Commonly the first things prayed for, and most known at all temples,

Are, that riches may increase, and wealth; that our chest may be

The greatest in the whole forum: but no poisons are drunk 25

From earthen ware: then fear them, when you take cups
Set with gems, and Setine wine shall sparkle in wide gold.

22. Empty traveller, &c.] Having nothing to lose, he has nothing to fear, and therefore has nothing to interrupt his jollity as he travels along, though in the presence of a robber.

23. Temples, &c.] Where people go to make prayers to the gods, and to implore the fulfilment of their desires and wishes.

25. The greatest, &c.] The forum, or market-place, at Rome, was the place where much money-business was transacted, and where money-lenders and borrowers met together; and he that was richest, and had most to lend, was sure to make the greatest sums by interest on his money, and perhaps was most respected. Hence the poet may be understood to mean, that it was the chief wish of most people to be richer than others.—Or, he may here allude to the chests of money belonging to the senators, and other rich men, which were laid up for safety in some of the buildings about the forum, as the temple of Castor, and others. Comp. Sat. xiv. l. 258—9.

— No poisons, &c.] The poorer sort of people might drink out of their coarse cups of earthen ware, without any fear of being poisoned for what they had.

26. Them.] Poisons.

27. Set with gems.] See Sat. v. l. 37—45. This was a mark of great riches.

— Setine wine.] So called from Setia, a city of Campania. It was a most delicious wine, preferred by Augustus, and the succeeding emperors, to all other. Glows with a fine red colour, and sparkles in the cup.

27. Wide gold.] Large golden cups.

Those, who were rich enough to afford these things, might indeed reasonably fear being poisoned by somebody, in order to get their estates.

28. Do you approve.] Laudas—praise or commend his conduct; for while these philosophers lived, many accounted them mad.

— One of the wise men, &c.] Meaning Democritus of Abdora, who always laughed, because he believed our actions to be folly : whereas Heraclitus of Ephesus, the other of the wise men here alluded to, always wept, because he thought them to be misery.

29. As oft as, &c.] Whenever he went out of his house—as oft as he stepped over his threshold.

30. The other.] Heraclitus. See note on line 28.

31. The censure, &c.] It is easy enough to find matter for severe laughter. Rigidi here, as an epithet to laughter, seems to denote that sort of censorious sneer which condemns and censures, at the same time that it derides the follies of mankind.

32. The wonder is, &c.] How Heraclitus could find tears enough to express his grief at human wretchedness, guilt, and woe, the occasions of it are so frequent.

34. In those cities] As there is at Rome.—The poet here satirizes the ridiculous appendages and ensigns of office, which were so coveted and esteemed by the Romans, as if they could convey happiness to the wearers.—He would also insinuate, that these things were made ridiculous by the conduct of the possessors of them.

35. Senatorial gowns.] Prætecta—so called because they were

Now therefore do you approve, that one of the wise men Laugh'd, as oft as from the threshold he had moved, and Brought forward one foot; the other contrary, wept? 30
 But the censure of a severe laugh is easy to any one,
 The wonder is whence that moisture could suffice for his eyes,

With perpetual laughter, Democritus used to agitate
 His lungs, tho' there were not, in those cities, Senatorial gowns, robes, rods, a litter, a tribunal. 35
 What, if he had seen the prætor, in high chariots Standing forth, and sublime in the midst of the dust of the circus,
 In the coat of Jove, and bearing from his shoulders the Tyrian were faced and bordered with purple—worne by the patricians and senators.

35. Robes.] Trabeæ—robes worne by kings, consuls, and augurs.

— Rods.] Fasces—bundles of birchen rods carried before the Roman magistrates, with an axe bound up in the middle of them, so as to appear at the top. These were ensigns of their official power to punish crimes, either by scourging or death.

— A litter.] Lectica.—See Sat. i. 32, note.

— Tribunal.] A seat in the forum, built by Romulus, in the form of an half-moon, where the judges sat, who had jurisdiction over the highest offences: at the upper part was placed the sella curulis, in which the prætor sat.

36. The prætor, &c.] He describes and derides the figure which the prætor made, when presiding at the Circensian games.

— In high chariots.] In a triumphal car, which was gilt, and drawn by four white horses—perhaps, by the plur. curri- bus, we may understand that he had several for different occasions.

37. Dust of the circus.] He stood, by the height and sublimity of his situation, fully exposed to the dust, which the chariots and horses of the racers raised.

38. Coat of Jove.] In a triumphal habit; for those who triumphed wore a tunic, or garment, which, at other times, was kept in the temple of Jupiter.

Ex humeris aulæa togæ, magnæque coronæ
 Tantum orbem, quanto cervix non sufficit ulla? 40
 Quippe tenet sudans hanc publicus, & sibi Consul Ne placeat, curru servus portatur eodem.
 Da nunc & volucrem, sceptroque surgit eburno,

 Tunc quoque materiam risûs invenit ad omnes
 Occursus hominum; cujus prudentia monstrat,
 Summos posse viros, & magna exempla daturus

38—9. The Tyrian tapestry, &c.] Sarra (from Heb. טרר) a name of Tyre, where hangings and tapestry were made, as also where the fish was caught, from whence the purple was taken with which they were dyed. This must be a very heavy material for a gown, especially as it was also embroidered with divers colours; and such a garment must be very cumbersome to the wearer, as it hung from his shoulders.

40. So large an orb, &c.] Add to this, a great heavy crown, the circumference of which was so large and thick, that no neck could be strong enough to avoid bending under it.

41. A sweating officer.] Publicus signifies some official servant, in some public office about the prætor on these occasions, who sat by him in the chariot, in order to assist in bearing up the crown, the weight of which made him sweat with holding it up.

— Left the consul, &c.] The antients had an institution, that a slave should ride in the same chariot when a consul triumphed, and should admonish him to know himself, lest he should be too vain.

This was done with regard to the prætor at the Circensian games, who, as we have seen above, appeared like a victorious consul; with the habit and equipage of triumph—Juvenal seems to use the word consul, here, on that account.

43. Add the bird, &c.] Among other ensigns of triumph, the prætor, on the above occasion, held an ivory rod, or sceptre, in his hand, with the figure of an eagle, with wings expanded, as if rising for flight, on the top of it.

44. The trumpeters.] Or blowers of the horn, or cornet. These, with the Tubicines, which latter seem included here under the general name of Cornicines, always attended the camp,

Tapestry of an embroider'd gown, and, of a great crown
 So large an orb, as no neck is sufficient for? 40
 For a sweating officer holds this, and left the consul should

 Now add the bird which rises on the ivory sceptre, camp, and, on the return of the conqueror, preceded the triumphal chariot, sounding their instruments.

44. The preceding offices, &c.] Officium signifies, sometimes, a solemn attendance on some public occasion, as on marriages, funerals, triumphs, &c. (see Sat. ii. l. 132.) Here it denotes, that the prætor was attended, on this occasion, by a long train of his friends and dependents, who came to grace the solemnity, by marching in procession before his chariot.

45. Snowy citizens, &c.] Many of the citizens, as was usual at triumphs, dressed in white robes, walking by the side of the horses, and holding the bridles.

46. The sportula.] The dole-basket. See Sat. i. l. 95.

— Buried in his coffers.] The meaning of this passage seems to be, that these citizens appeared, and gave their attendance, not from any real value for him, but for what they could get.

He is supposed to have great wealth hidden, or buried, in his coffers, which this piece of attention was calculated to fetch out, in charity to his poor fellow-citizens that attended him on this occasion.—q. d. All this formed a scene which would have made Democritus shake his sides with laughing. Comp. l. 33—4.

47. Then also he.] Democritus in his time.

47—8. At all meetings of men.] Every time he met people as he walked about—or, in every company he met with.

48. Whose prudence.] Wisdom, discernment of right and wrong.

50. Of blockheads.] Vervex—literally signifies a wether-sheep, but was proverbially used for a stupid person: as we use

Ridebat curas, necnon & gaudia vulgi, Interdum & lachrymas; cū fortunæ ipse minaci
 Mandaret laqueum, mediumque ostenderet unguem, Ergo supervacua hæc aut pernicioſa petuntur,
 Propter quæ fas eſt genua incerare Deorum.

Quoſdam præcipitat ſubjecta potentia magnæ
 Invidiæ; mergit longa atque inſignis honorum
 Pagina; deſcendunt ſtatuz, reſtemque ſequuntur;
 Ipſas deindè rotas bigarum impaſta ſecuris

uſe the word ſheepiſh, and ſheepiſhneſs, in ſomething like the ſame ſenſe, to denote an awkward, ſtupid ſhyness.

The poet therefore means, a country of ſtupid fellows. Plaut. Perſ. Act ii. has—Ain' verò vervecum caput?

50. Thick air.] Democritus was born at Abdera, a city of Thrace, where the air, which was foggy and thick, was ſuppoſed to make the inhabitants dull and ſtupid.

So Horace, ſpeaking of Alexander the Great, as a critic of little or no diſcernment in literature, ſays—Bœotum in craſſo jurares aëre natum. Epist. i. Lib. ii. l. 244. By which, as by many other testimonies, we find, that the inhabitants of Bœotia were ſigmatized alſo in the ſame manner. Hence Bœoticum ingenium was a phraſe for dulneſs and ſtupidity.

52. Preſent a halter, &c.] Mandare laqueum alicui, was a phraſe made uſe of to ſignify the utmoſt contempt and indiſference, like ſending a halter to a perſon, as if to bid him hang himſelf. Democritus is here repreſented in this light, as continually laughing at the cares and joys of the general herd, and as himſelf treating with ſcorn the frowns of adverſe fortune.

53. His middle nail.] i. e. His middle finger, and point at her in deriſion. To hold out the middle finger, the reſt being contracted, and bent downwards, was an act of great contempt; like pointing at a perſon among us. This mark of contempt is very antient. See Il. lviii. 9.

54. Therefore, &c.] It follows, therefore, from the example of Democritus, who was happy without the things which people ſo anxiously ſeek after, and petition the gods for, that they are ſuperfluous and unneceſſary.—It likewiſe follows, that they are injurious, becauſe they expoſe people to the fears and dangers of adverſe fortune; whereas Democritus, who had them not, could ſet the frowns of fortune at defiance, poſſeſſing a mind which carried him above worldly cares or fears.

55. Lawful.] Fas ſignifies that which is permitted, and therefore lawful to do.

55. To

He derided the cares, and also the joys of the vulgar,
And sometimes their tears ; when himself could present a halter

To threatening fortune, and shew his middle nail.

Therefore, these (are) unprofitable, or pernicious, things, (which) are ask'd,

For which it is lawful to cover with wax the knees of the gods. 55

Power, subject to great envy, precipitates some,
A long and famous catalogue of honours overwhelms,
Statues descend and they follow the rope ;
Then, the driven axe, the very wheels of two-horse cars

55. To cover with wax, &c.] It was the manner of the ancients, when they made their vows to the gods, to write them on paper (or waxen tables) seal them up, and, with wax, fasten them to the knees of the images of the gods, or to the thighs, that being supposed the seat of mercy. When their desires were granted, they took away the paper, tore it, and offered to the gods what they had promised. See Sat. ix. l. 139. The gods permit us to ask, but the consequences of having our petitions answered are often fatal. Comp. l. 7, 8.

56. Precipitates some.] viz. Into ruin and destruction.

57. Catalogue, &c.] Pagina, in its proper and literal sense, signifies a page of a book, but here alludes to a plate, or table of brass, fixed before the statues of eminent persons, and containing all the titles and honours of him whose statue it was.

— Overwhelms.] With ruin, by exposing them to the envy and malice of those, in whose power and inclination it may be to disgrace and destroy them.

58. Statues descend.] Are pulled down.

— Follow the rope.] With which the populace (set on work by a notion of doing what would please the emperor, who had disgraced his prime-minister Sejanus) first pulled down all the statues of Sejanus, of which there were many set up in Rome, and then dragged them with ropes about the streets.

59. The driven axe.] Impacta—driven—forced against.—There were some statues of Sejanus, by which he was represented on horseback ; others in a triumphal car, drawn by two horses (comp. Sat. viii. l. 3.) ; all which were broken to pieces, the very chariots and horses demolished, and, if made of brass, carried to the fire and melted.

60. Undeserving

Cædit, & immeritis franguntur crura caballis. 60
 Jam strident ignes, jam foliibus atque caminis
 Ardet adoratum populo caput, & crepat ingens
 Sejanus : deinde ex facie toto orbe secundâ
 Fiunt urceoli, pelves, fartago, patellæ.

 Hunc hominem : sed quo cecidit sub crimine ? quisnam

 Nil horum : verbosa & grandis epistola venit

60. Undeserving horses, &c.] Their spite against Sejanus, who could alone deserve their indignation, carried them to such fury, as to demolish even the most innocent appendages to his state and dignity.

61. The fires roar, &c.] From the force of the bellows, in the forges prepared for melting the brass of the statues.

— Stoves.] Or furnaces.

62. The head adored, &c.] Of Sejanus, once the darling of the people, who once worshipped him as a god.

63. Cracks.] By the violence of the flames.

— Second face, &c.] Sejanus was so favoured by Tiberius, that he raised him to the highest dignity next to himself.

64. Water-pots, &c.] The meanest household utensils are made from the brass, which once conferred the highest honour on Sejanus, when representing him in the form of statues.

65. Laurels, &c.] Here the poet shews the malicious triumph of envy. It was customary to adorn the doors of their houses with crowns, or garlands of laurel, on any public occasion of joy—such was the fall of poor Sejanus to his enemies.

66. A white bull.] The beasts sacrificed to the celestial gods were white (cretatum, here, lit. chalked, whited) ; those to the infernal gods were black. This offering to Jupiter, in his temple on the capitol hill, must be supposed to have been by way of thanksgiving for the fall of Sejanus. A lively mark of the hatred and prejudice which the people had conceived against him, on his disgrace—as it follows—

— Dragg'd by a hook, &c.] To the Scalæ Gemoniæ, and then thrown into the Tiber.

67. To be look'd upon.] As a spectacle of contempt to the whole city.

Demolishes, and the legs of the undeserving horses are broken. 60

The head adored by the people burns, and the great Sejanus Cracks: then, from the second face in the whole world,

67. All rejoice.] At his disgrace and misery the people triumph.

— "What lips, &c.] The poet here supposes a language to be holden, which is very natural for a prejudiced, ignorant people to utter on such an occasion, as they saw him dragging along by the hands of the executioner, or perhaps as they viewed him lying dead on the bank of the Tiber (comp. l. 86.) before his body was thrown into it.

What a blubber-lipp'd, ill-looking fellow! say they.

69. What crime, &c.] What was charged against him (says one) that he should be brought to this?

70. Informer.] Delator—his accuser to the emperor.

— "What discoveries, &c.] Of the fact, and its circumstances? and on what evidence hath he (i. e. the informer) proved the crime alledged against him?

71. "Nothing of these] says the answerer—i. e. there was no regular form of conviction.

— "A great epistle, &c.] It, some how or other, came to the ears of Tiberius, that his favourite Sejanus had a design upon the empire, on which he wrote a long pompous epistle to the senate, who had Sejanus seized, and sentenced him to be punished, as is mentioned above:—viz. that he should be put to death, then have an hook fixed in him, be dragged through the streets of Rome to the Scalæ Gemoniæ, and thrown at last into the Tiber.

Tiberius was at that time at Capree, an island on the coast of Naples,

A Capreis—benè habet ; nil plus interrogo : sed quid

 Dâmnatos. Idem populus, si Nurfcia Thusco

Naples, about twenty-five miles south of that city, indulging in all manner of excess and debauchery.

The Scalæ Gemoniæ was a place, appointed either for torturing criminals, or for exposing their bodies after execution. Some derive the name Gemoniæ from one Gemonius, who was first executed there ; others from gemere, to groan, because the place rang with the groans and complaints of those who were put to death. It was on the hill Aventinus, and there were several steps led up to it, whence the place was called Scalæ Gemoniæ. The dead bodies of those who died under the hands of the executioner were dragged thither by an iron hook, and after they had been some time exposed to public view, were thrown into the Tiber. See Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. xii. p. 214, note F.

73. Mob of Remus, &c.] i. e. The people in general ; so called because descended from Romulus and Remus. How did they behave ? says the querist.

— “ It follows fortune, &c.] It is answered—The common people behaved as they always do, by changing with the fortune of the condemned, and treating them with the utmost spite.

74. Nurfcia, &c.] Sejanus was a Tuscan, born at Volscinium, where the goddess Nurfcia, the same as fortune, was worshipped.—q. d. If fortune had favoured Sejanus.

75. Secure old age, &c.] If Tiberius had thought himself secure from any plot against him, and therefore had taken no measures to prevent the consequences of it.

76. Oppress'd.] By death, from the hands of Sejanus.—q. d. If the plot of Sejanus had succeeded, and the emperor dethroned.

76. It would, &c.] That very populace who now treat the poor fallen Sejanus so ill, would have made him emperor, and have changed his name to the imperial title of Augustus.

— That very hour.] Instead of his being put to death, dragged by the hook, and insulted by the populace, they would,

"Capreae:" "It is very well, I ask no more : but what did
 "The mob of Remus?"—"It follows fortune, as always,
 "and hates
 "The condemn'd—The same people, if Nurscia had favour'd
 "The Tuscan—if the secure old age of the prince had

 "Oppressed, it would, in that very hour, have called Sejanus,
 "Augustus: Long ago, ever since we sell our suffrages

 "Authority, fasces, legions, all things, now itself

 "Bread and the Circenses."—"I hear many are about to "perish"—

at that very hour, have been heaping the highest honours upon him. So precarious, fluctuating, and uncertain, is the favour of the multitude !

77. We sell, &c.] The poorer sort of plebeians used to sell their votes to the candidates for public offices, before Julius Cæsar took from them the right of electing their magistrates. Since that time—

78. It.] The populace.

— Done with cares.] Effudit, literally, has poured out, as a person empties a vessel by pouring out the liquor. The poet means, that since the right of electing their magistrates was taken from them, and they could no longer sell their votes, they had parted with all their cares about the state.

— For it.] That same populace.

— Which gave, &c.] By their having the right of election, conferred public offices on whom they chose.

79. Authority.] Power, or government : this alludes to the great offices in the state, which were once elective by the people.

— Fasces.] Consuls and prætors, who had the fasces carried before them.

— Legions.] Military præfectures.

— All things.] All elective offices.

79—80. Itself refrains.] From concerns of state.

80. Only wishes, &c.] Now they care for nothing else, at least with any anxiety, but for bread to be distributed to them as usual, by the command of the emperor, to satisfy their hunger ; and the games in the circus to divert them : of these last the populace were very fond. See Sat. xi. § 3.

81. "I hear many, &c."] Here begins a fresh discourse on the occasion and circumstances of the time.

Nil dubium : magna est fornacula : pallidulus mī
 Brutidius meus ad Martiā fuit obviū aram—Quā timeo, victus ne pœnas exigat Ajax,
 Ut malè defensus ! curramus præcipientes, &c. 85
 Dū jacet in ripā, calcemur Cæsaris hostem.
 Sed videant servi, ne quis neget, & pavidum in jus
 Cervice astrictā dominum trahat : hi sermones
 Tunc de Sejano : secreta hæc murmura vulgi.
 Visne salutari sicut Sejanus ? habere 90
 Tantundem, atque illi summas donare curules ?
 Illum exercitibus præponere ? tutor haberi

I hear, says one of the standers by, that Sejanus is not the only one who is to suffer ; a good many more will be cut off, as well as he, about this plot.—No doubt, says the other—

82. The furnace is large.] And made to hold more statues for melting than those of Sejanus. See l. 61.

82—3. Brutidius met me.] This was a rhetorician and famous historian, a great friend of Sejanus, and therefore was horribly frightened, lest it should be his turn next to be apprehended and put to death, as concerned in the conspiracy.

84. Left Ajax conquer'd, &c.] Alluding to the story of Ajax, who, being overcome in his dispute with Ulysses about the armour of Achilles (see Ovid, Met. Lib. xiii.) went mad, fell upon man and beast, and afterwards destroyed himself.

These seem to be the words of Brutidius, expressing his fears of being suspected to have been concerned in the conspiracy with Sejanus ; and, in order to wipe off all imputation of the kind, not only from himself, but from the person he is speaking to, he advises, that no time should be lost, but that they should hasten to the place where the corpse of Sejanus was exposed, and do some act, which might be construed into an abhorrence of Sejanus, and consequently into a zeal for the honour and service of the emperor.

“ How I fear (says Brutidius, looking aghast) lest the emperor, thinking his cause not cordially espoused, and that he was badly defended, should wreak his vengeance on such as he suspects to have been too remiss, and, like the furious Ajax, when overcome—like another victus Ajax—destroy all that he takes to be his enemies, as Ajax destroyed the sheep and oxen, when he ran mad on his defeat, taking them for the Grecians on whom he vowed revenge.” Other explications are given to this place, but I think this suits best with l. 82—3.

85. Let us run, &c.] As precipitately, as fast as we can—

"No doubt: the furnace is large: my friend Brutidius

"Met me, a little pale, at the altar of Mars"—

"How I fear lest Ajax conquer'd should exact punishment,

"As defended badly!—let us run headlong, and, while

"he 85

"Lies on the bank, trample on the enemy of Cæsar.

"But let the slaves see, lest any should deny it, and drag into "Law their fearful master with shackled neck:" these were

Discourses then about Sejanus: these the secret murmurs of the vulgar.

Will you be saluted as Sejanus? have 90

As much—and give to one the chief chair of state—

Set another at the head of armies? be accounted guardian let us lose no time to avoid the emperor's suspicion of our favouring Sejanus, and wreaking his vengeance upon us.

85. While he.] Sejanus—i. e. his corpse.

86. Lies on the bank.] i. e. Exposed on the bank, before it is thrown into the river Tiber.

— Trample, &c.] Set our feet upon his corpse, to shew our indignation against this supposed enemy of Tiberius.

87. Let the slaves see, &c.] That they may be witnesses for their masters, in case these should be accused of not having done it, or of having shewn the least respect to Sejanus, and so be brought under the displeasure of the emperor, and hurried to judgment.

88. Shackled neck."] Those who were dragged to punishment, had a chain or halter fastened about the neck: this was the condition of some when brought to trial; so, among us, felons, and others accused of capital offences, are usually brought to their trial with gyves or fetters upon their legs.

88—9. The discourses, &c.] Thus do the people talk about poor Sejanus, the remembrance of his greatness being all passed and gone, and his shameful sufferings looked upon with the most ignominious contempt.

90. Saluted, &c.] You, who think happiness to consist in the favour of the prince, in great power, and high preferment, what think you?—do you now wish to occupy the place which Sejanus once held—to have as much respect paid you—to accumulate as many riches—to have as many preferments and places of honour in your gift?

92. Guardian, &c.] Who, in the absence of Tiberius, at his palace

Principis Augustâ Caprearum in rupe sedentis
 Cum grege Chaldæo? vis certè pila, cohortes, Egregios equites, & castra domestica—quidni 95
 Hæc cupias? & qui nolunt occidere quenquam, Possè volunt. sed quæ præclara, & prospera tanti,
 Cùm rebus lætis par sit mensura malorum?
 Hujus, qui trahitur, prætextam sumere mavis,
 An Fidenarum, Gabiorumque esse potestas, 100 Et de mensurâ jus dicere, vasa minora Frangere pannosus vacuis Ædilis Ulubris?
 Ergo quid optandum foret, ignorâsse fateris palace on the rock at Capræ (see note on l. 71—2, ad fin.) amidst a band of astrologers from Chaldea (who amused the prince with their pretended knowledge of the stars, and their government of human affairs) governed all his affairs of state, and managed them, as a tutor or guardian manages the affairs of a youth under age. Thus high was Sejanus in the opinion and confidence of Tiberius—but do you envy him?

94. Javelins.] Pila were a kind of javelins with which the Roman foot were armed: therefore the poet is here to be understood as saying to the person with whom he is supposed to discourse—"You certainly wish to be an officer, and to have "soldiers under your command."

— Cohorts.] A cohort was a tenth part of a legion.

95. Domestic tents, &c.] The castra domestica were composed of horse, who were the body-guards of the prince or prætor—hence called also prætoriani. These seem to have been something like our life-guards.

— "Why should you not, &c."] What harm, say you, is there in such a desire?—"I don't desire this for the sake of "hurting or killing any body."—"Aye, that may be—but "still to know that such a thing may be in your power, upon "occasion, gives you no small idea of self-importance."

97. What renowned, &c.] But, to consider coolly of the matter, what is there so valuable in dignity and prosperity, since, amid the enjoyment of them, they are attended with an equal measure of uneasiness, and when a fatal reverse, even in the securest and happiest moments, may be impending? the evil, therefore, may be said, at least, to counterbalance the good.

99. Of this man, &c.] Of Sejanus.—Had you rather be invested with his dignity?

100. The power.] The magistrate of some little town, like Fidena,

Of a prince, sitting in the august rock of Capreæ,
With a Chaldæan band? you certainly would have javelins, cohorts,

Choice horsemen, domestic tents. "Why should you
"not 95

"Desire these things?" Even those who would not kill any one

Would be able. But what renowned and prosperous things are of so much

Value, since to prosperity there may be an equal measure of evils?

Had you rather take the robe of this man, who is dragg'd
Along, or be the power of Fidenæ, or Gabii, 100

And judge about a measure, and lesser vessels

Break, a ragged Ædile at empty Ulubræ?—

Therefore, what was to be wish'd for, you will confess Sejanus

Fidena, or Gabii. See Sat. vi. l. 56—7. Called in Italy—
Podestà. Something like what we should call—a country justice.

102. A ragged Ædile.] Pannofus signifies patched or ragged. The Ædile, in the burghs of Italy, was an officer who had jurisdiction over weights and measures, and if these were bad, he had authority to break them. He was an officer of low rank, and though, like all magistrates, he wore a gown, yet this having been delivered down from his predecessors, was old and ragged, very unlike the fine robe of Sejanus, and other chief magistrates at Rome. See Perf. Sat. i. l. 130, and note.

— Empty Ulubræ.] A small town of Campania, in Italy, very thinly inhabited. Comp. Sat. iii. l. 2.

103. Therefore, &c.] In this, and the four following lines, the poet very finely applies what he has said, on the subject of Sejanus, to the main argument of this Satire; viz. that mortals are too short-sighted to see, and too ignorant to know, what is best for them, and therefore those things which are most coveted, often prove the most destructive; and the higher we rise in the gratification of our wishes, the higher may we be raising the precipice from which we may fall.

Sejanum : nam qui nimios optabat honores,
 Et nimias poscebat opes, numerosa parabat 105

 Quisquis adhuc uno partem colit affe Minervam, Quem sequitur custos angustæ vernula capse ;

107. Enforced ruin.] Impulsæ ruinæ—into which he was driven, as it were, by the envy and malice of those enemies, which his greatness, power, and prosperity, had created. Impulsæ—metaph. alluding to the violence with which a person is thrown, or pushed, from an high precipice. Immane—dreadful—immenſe—huge—great.

108. The Crassus.] M. Crassus making war upon the Parthians for the sake of plunder, Surenâ, general of the enemy, slew him, and cut off his head and his hand, which he carried into Armenia to his master.

— The Pompeys.] Pompey the Great, being routed at the battle of Pharsalia, fled into Ægypt, where he was perfidiously slain. He left two sons, Cneius and Sextus ; the first was defeated in a land battle in Spain, the other in a sea-fight on the coast of Sicily. We are not only to understand here Crassus and Pompey, but, by Crassos & Pompeios, plur. all such great men who have fallen by ill-fated ambition.

109. Brought down, &c.] i. e. Julius Cæsar, who, after he had obtained the sovereignty, partly by arms and violence, partly by art and intrigue, was publicly assassinated in the senate-house, as a tyrant and enemy to the liberty of his country. His scourges—i. e. made them slaves, as it were, and subject to his will, liable to be treated in the most humiliating manner.

110. Chief place.] The ambition of reigning absolutely, The poet here shews the fatal source of misery to the aspiring and

To have been ignorant: for he who desired too many honours,
And sought too much wealth, was preparing numerous 105 Stories of an high tower, from whence his fall might be Higher, and the precipice of his enforced ruin be dreadful.

What overthrew the Crassi, the Pompeys, and him who Brought down the subdued Romans to his scourges?

Why truly, the chief place, sought by every art, 110
And great vows listen'd to by malignant gods.

To the son-in-law of Ceres, without slaughter and wound, few Kings descend, and tyrants by a dry death.

For the eloquence and fame of Demosthenes, or of Cicero, He begins to wish, and does wish during the whole Quin-quatria, 115

Whoever reveres Minerva, hitherto gotten for three farthings,

Whom a little slave follows, the keeper of his narrow satchel:
But each orator perish'd by eloquence; each and ambitious; namely, a restless desire after greatness, so as to leave no stone unturned to come at it—nullâ non arte, &c.

111. Great vows.] i. e. Wishes and prayers for greatness, honours, riches, &c.

— By malignant gods.—] Who, provoked by the unreasonable and foolish wishes of mortals, punish them, with accepting their vows, and with granting their desires. Comp. l. 7, 8.

112. Son-in-law of Ceres.] Pluto, the fabled god, and king of the infernal regions: he stole Proserpina, the daughter of Jupiter and Ceres, and carried her to his subterranean dominions.

The poet means here to say, that few of the great and successful ambitious die, without some violence committed upon them.

113. A dry death.] Without bloodshed.

115. The whole, &c.] Minerva was the goddess of learning and eloquence; her festival was celebrated for five days, hence called Quinquatria—during this the school-boys had holidays.

116. Whoever reveres, &c.] The poor school-boy, who has got as much learning as has cost him about three farthings; i. e.
the merest young beginner at the lower end of a school.

117. A little slave, &c.] This is a natural image of little master going to school, with a servant-boy to carry his satchel of books after him, and heightens the ridiculous idea of his coveting the eloquence of the great orators.

118. Each orator, &c.] See note on l. 9.—i. e. Both De-

Largus & exundans letho dedit ingenii fons:
 Ingenio manus est & cervix cæsa; nec unquam 120

mosthenes and Cicero. Demosthenes, to avoid the cruelty of Antipater, poisoned himself.

120. Hand and neck, &c.] Of Cicero, which were cut off by the emissaries of Antony, when they attacked and murdered him in his litter on the road. They, i. e. Tully's head and hand, were afterwards fixed up at the rostra, from whence he had spoken his Philippics, by order of Antony.

— Cut off by genius.] i. e. His capacity, and powers of eloquence, which he used against Antony, brought this upon him.

121. Rostra.] A place in the forum, where lawyers and orators harangued. See AINSW. Rostra, N° 2.—No weak lawyer, or pleader, could ever make himself of consequence enough to be in danger of any design against his life, by what he was capable of saying in public.

122. O fortunatam, &c.] Mr. Dryden renders this line—

Fortune fore-tun'd the dying notes of Rome,
 Till I, thy consul sole, consol'd thy doom:

And observes, that, “the Latin of this couplet is a verse of “Tully’s (in which he sets out the happiness of his own consulship) famous for the vanity and ill poetry of it.”

It is bad enough; but Mr. Dryden has made it still worse, by adding more jingles to it.—However, to attempt translating it is ridiculous, because it disappoints the purpose of the passage, which is to give a sample of Tully’s bad poetry in his own words.

123. Isibus, &c.] q. d. If Tully had never written or spoken better than this, he needed not to have dreaded any mischief to himself; he might have defied the swords which Antony employed against him.

A large and overflowing fountain of genius consigned to death.

The hand and neck was cut off by genius ; nor ever 120
Were rostra wet with the blood of a weak lawyer.

O fortunatam natam, me consule, Romam !

He might have condemn'd the swords of Antony, if thus
He had said all things. I like better laughable poems,
Than thee, divine Philippic of conspicuous fame, 125
Who art roll'd up next from the first. Him also a cruel Death snatched away, whom Athens admired, Rapid, and moderating the reins of the full theatre.

He was begotten, the gods adverse, and fate unpropitious, Whom his father, blear-eyed with the reek of a burning mass, 130

124. Laughable poems.] Ridenda—ridiculous—that are only fit to be laughed at.

125. Divine Philippic.] Meaning Cicero's second Philippic, which, of all the fourteen orations which he made against Antony, was the most cutting and severe, and this probably cost him his life.

He called these orations Philippics, as he tells Atticus, because in the freedom and manner of his speech he imitated the Philippics (φιλιππικοί λόγοι) of Demosthenes, whose orations against Philip were so called.

126. Roll'd up, &c.] Volveris.—The books of the ancients were rolled up in volumes of paper or parchment—this famous Philippic stood second in the volume. See Sat. xiv. l. 102.

127. Athens admired.] Demosthenes. See note on l. 9.

128. Rapid.] Torrentem—his eloquence rapid and flowing, like the torrent of a river.

— Moderating—] Or governing the full assembly of his hearers as he pleased, as a horse is managed and governed by a rein ; so Demosthenes regulated and governed the minds of his auditory.

129. Gods adverse, &c.] It was a current notion among the ancients, that where people were unfortunate in their lives, the gods were displeased at their birth, and always took a part against them.

130. His father.] Demosthenes is said to have been the son of a blacksmith at Athens.

— Of a burning mass.] Large masses of iron, when red-hot

A carbone & forcipibus, gladioque parante
Incude, & luteo Vulcano ad rhetora misit.

131. Coal and pincers, &c.] His father at first thought of bringing up his son Demosthenes to his own trade ; but he took him from this, and put him to a rhetorician to be taught eloquence.

132. Dirty Vulcan.] Vulcan was the fabled god of smiths, whose trade is very filthy and dirty. Sat. xiii. l. 44—5.

133. Maimed trophies.] The trophy was a monument erected in memory of victory. The custom came from the Greeks, who, when they had routed their enemies, erected a tree, with all the branches cut off, on which they suspended the spoils of armour which they had taken from them, as well as other ensigns of victory : several of which the poet here enumerates ; but as nothing was entire, the poet calls them maimed trophies.

134. A beaver.] Buccula, from bucca, the cheek, seems to have been that part of armour which was fastened to the helmet, and came down over the cheeks, and fastened under the chin.

135. Beam.] Temo was the beam of the wain, or the draught-tree, whereon the yoke hung : by this the chariot was supported and conducted, while drawn by the yoke.

136. A sad captive, &c.] On the top of the triumphal arch, which was built upon these occasions, they made some wretched captive place himself, and there sit bemoaning his wretched fate, while the conquerors were exulting in their victory. So Mr. DRYDEN—

——an arch of victory,

On whose high convex sits a captive foe,
And sighing casts a mournful look below.

137. To be greater, &c.] Such is the folly of mankind, that these

From coal and pincers, and from the anvil preparing

The spoils of war, to maimed trophies a breast-plate Fixed, and a beaver hanging from a broken helmet, these wretched trifles are looked upon, not only as bearing the highest value, but as something more than human.

137. For these, &c.] Commanders of all nations have exerted themselves, through every scene of danger and fatigue, in order to get at these ensigns of fame and victory. Erexit se— hath roused himself to mighty deeds.

138. The Roman.] By the Roman, perhaps, we may understand Julius Cæsar, M. Anthony, and others, who, while they were greedily following military glory, were preparing ruin for themselves, as well as many sad calamities to their country.

— Greek.] Here Miltiades and Themistocles, the two Athenian generals, may be alluded to, who, while they were catching at military fame, perished miserably.

— Barbarian.] A name which the Greeks and Romans were fond of fixing on all but themselves.

Here may be meant Hannibal, the great Carthaginian general, who, while he vexed the Romans with continual wars, occasioned the overthrow of his country, and his own miserable death.

139. Causes of danger, &c.] These things have been the grand motives of their exertions, in the very face of difficulty, and even of death.

140. So much greater, &c.] i. e. All would be great; how few wish to be good!

142. If you take away, &c.] Who is so disinterestedly vir-tuous, as to love and embrace virtue, merely for the sake of being and doing good? indeed, who would be virtuous at all, unless

less the fame and reputation of being so brought something with them to gratify the pride and vanity of the human heart? Virtue seldom walks forth, saith one, without vanity at her side.

142. The glory of a few.] As Marius, Sylla, Pompey, Antony, &c.—q. d. Many instances have there been, where a few men, in search of fame, and of the gratification of their ambition, have been the destroyers of their country.

144. A title, &c.] An inscription to be put on their monuments, in which their remains were deposited—this has often proved a motive of ambition, and has urged men to the most dangerous, as well as mischievous, exploits.

145. Evil strength, &c.] There was a sort of wild fig-tree, which grew about walls and other buildings, which, by spreading and running its roots under them, and shooting its branches into the joinings of them, in length of time weakened and destroyed them, as we often see done by ivy among us. See Perf. Sat. i. l. 25. Evil here is to be understood in the sense of hurtful, mischievous.

A poor motive to fame, then, is a stone monument with a fine inscription, which, in length of time, it will be in the power of a wild fig-tree to demolish.

146. Fates are given, &c.] Even sepulchres themselves must yield to fate, and, consequently, the fame and glory, which they are meant to preserve, must perish with them—how vain then the pursuit, how vain the happiness, which has no other motive or foundation!

147. Weigh Hannibal.] Place him in the scale of human greatness—i. e. consider him well, as a great man.

Hannibal was a valiant and politic Carthaginian commander; he gave the Romans several signal overthrows, particularly at Cannæ, a village of Apulia, in the kingdom of Naples.

— How many pounds, &c.] Alas, how little is left of him! a few inconsiderable ashes! which may be contained within the compass.

Great Hannibal within the balance lay,
And tell how many pounds his ashes weigh,

&c. &c.

148. Wash'd, &c.] By the Moorish sea. The poet describes the situation of Africa, the third part of the globe then known.
From Asia it is separated by the Nile ; on the west it is washed by the Atlantic Ocean, which beats upon the shores of Æthiopia and Libya, joining to which were the people of Mauritania, or Moors, conquered by Hannibal.

149. Warm Nile.] Made so by the great heat of the sun, it lying under the torrid zone.

150. Again.] Rursus—i. e. insuper, moreover—as Sat. vi.
154.

— Other elephants.] Other countries where elephants are bred ; meaning, here, Libya and Mauritania, which were conquered by Hannibal.

151. Spain is added, &c.] To the empires he had conquered, he added Spain, yet was not content.

— The Pyrenean.] The Pyrenees, as they are now called—that immense range of high mountains which separate France from Spain.

152. Nature opposed, &c.] For nature, as Pliny says, raised up the high mountains of the Alps, as a wall, to defend Italy from

Diduxit scopulos, & montem rupit aceto.

from the incursions of the Barbarians. These are constantly covered with snow.

153. Severed rocks, &c.] By immense dint of labour and perseverance he cut a way in the rocks, sufficient for his men, horses, and elephants to pass.

— With vinegar.] Livy says, that, in order to open and enlarge the way above mentioned, large trees were felled, and piled round the rock, and set on fire; the wind blowing hard, a fierce flame soon broke out, so that the rock glowed like the coals with which it was heated. Then Hannibal caused a great quantity of vinegar to be poured upon the rock, which piercing into the veins of it, which were now cracked by the intense heat of the fire, calcined and softened it, so that he could the more easily cut the path through it.

Polybus says nothing of this vinegar, and therefore many reject this incident as fabulous.

Pliny mentions one extraordinary quality of vinegar, viz. its being able to break rocks and stones which have been heated by fire. But, admitting this, it seems difficult to conceive how Hannibal could procure a quantity of vinegar sufficient for such a purpose, in so mountainous and barren a country. See Univ. Ant. Hist. vol. xvii. p. 597—8.

154. Possesses Italy, &c.] i. e. Arrives there—comes into Italy—which for sixteen years together he wasted and destroyed, beating the Roman troops wherever he met them; but he was not content with this, he determined to go further, and take Rome.

155. Nothing is done, &c.] This is the language of an ambitious mind, which esteemed all that had been done as nothing; unless Rome itself were conquered.

— Punic army.] The Pœni (quasi Phœni a Phœnicibus unde orti) were a people of Africa, near Carthage; but being united

He severed rocks, and rent the mountain with vinegar.

He now possesses Italy, yet endeavours to go farther:

"Nothing is done (says he) unless, with the Punic army, united to them, Pœni is used, per synec. for the Carthaginians in general.

156. Suburra.] One of the principal streets in Rome. See before, Sat. iii. 5, note.

157. What a face!] What a figure was he all this while; how curious a picture would he have made, mounted on his elephant, and exhibiting his one-eyed countenance above the rest!

When Hannibal came into Etruria (Tuscany) the river Arno was swelled to a great height, insomuch that it occasioned the loss of many of his men and beasts, particularly of the elephants, of which the only one remaining was that on which Hannibal was mounted. Here, by the damps and fatigue, he lost one of his eyes.

158. Getulian beast.] i. e. The elephant. The Getulians were a people of Libya, bordering on Mauritania, where many elephants were found.

159. His exit?] What was the end of all his exploits, as well as of himself?

— O glory!] Alas, what is it all!

160. Is subdued, &c.] He was at last routed by Scipio, and forced to fly for refuge to Prusias king of Bithynia.

161. Client.] Client signifies a retainer—a dependent—one who has put himself under the protection of a patron, to whom he pays all honour and observance.

This great and wonderful man was thus reduced, after all his glorious deeds.

— Sits, &c.] Like a poor and mean dependent.

162. Till it might please, &c.] The word tyrant is not always ways to be taken, as among us it usually is, in a bad sense. It was used in old time in a good sense for a king, or sovereign.

162. To awake.] When he came to prefer his petition for protection, he could gain no admission till the king's sleeping hours were over ; Hannibal was now in too abject and mean a condition to demand an audience, or even to expect one, till the king was perfectly at leisure.

It is the custom of the eastern princes to sleep about the middle of the day (2 Sam. iv. 5.) when the heats are intense, and none dare disturb them. This was the occasion of the deaths of many in our time at Calcutta, where, when taken by the Subah Surajah Dowlah, a number of gentlemen were put into a place called the Black-hole, where the air was so confined, that it suffocated the greatest part of them : but they could not be released while their lives might have been saved ; for, being put there by order of the Subah, who alone could order their release, the officers of that prince only answered their cries for deliverance, by saying, that the Subah was lain down to sleep, and nobody dared to wake him.

163. Disturbed human affairs.] Miscuit—disordered—put into confusion—a great part of the world, by his ambitious exploits and undertakings.

166. A ring, &c.] When he overthrew the Romans at Cannæ, he took above three bushels of gold rings from the dead bodies, which, says the poet, were fully revenged by his ring, which he always carried about him, and in which he concealed a dose of poison ; so that when the Romans sent to Prusias to deliver him up, Hannibal, seeing there were no hopes of safety, took the poison and died. Thus fell that great man, who had so often escaped the swords, and the darts, and stones hurled by the

166. Go madman.] For such wert thou, and such are all who build their greatness and happiness on military fame.

167. Please the boys, &c.] The boys in the schools used to be exercised in making and speaking declamations, the subjects of which were usually taken from histories of famous men. A fine end, truly, of Hannibal's Alpine expedition, to become the subject of a school-boy's theme or declamation! well worthy so much labour, fatigue, and danger!

168. Pellæan youth.] Alexander the Great, born at Pella, a city of Macedon, died of a fever, occasioned by drinking to excess at Babylon. He had lamented, that, after having conquered almost all the East, all Greece, and, in short, the greatest part of the world, that there were no more worlds for him to conquer. He died three hundred and twenty-three years before Christ, æt. thirty-three.

170. Gyaras.] One of the Cyclades (islands in the Ægean Sea) whereto criminals were banished: it was full of rocks. Sat. i. 73.

— Seriphus.] See Sat. vi. 563, and note.

171. The city.] Babylon.

— Brickmakers.] This city was surrounded by a wall of brick, of an immense height and thickness. Ov. Met. iv. l. 58.—Figulus signifies any worker in clay; so a maker of bricks.

172. Sarcophagus.] A grave, tomb, or sepulchre. Α σαρξ, flesh, and φάγνυς, to eat—because bodies there consume and waste away.

— Death only, &c.] Death alone teaches us how vain and empty the pursuits of fame and earthly glory are; and that,

however the ambitious may swell with pride, yet, in a little while, a small urn will contain the hero, who, when living, thought the world not sufficient to gratify his ambition.

174. Athos, &c.] A mountain in Macedon, running like a peninsula into the Ægean Sea. Xerxes is said to have digged through a part of it to make a passage for his fleet.

175. Adventures in history.] i. e. Dares to record in history. The Grecian historians were very fond of the marvellous, and, of course, were apt to introduce great improbabilities and falsehoods in their narrations.

— Strowed.] Covered, paved, as it were—for Xerxes is said to have had twelve thousand ships with him in his expedition, with which he formed the bridge after mentioned.

176. Those very ships.] Which had sailed through the passage at Mount Athos.

— Put under wheels.] He, in order to march his forces from Asia into Europe, made a bridge with his ships over the sea, which joined Abydus, a city of Asia, near the Hellespont, to Sestos, a city of the Thracian Chersonesus, which was opposite to Abydus, and separated by an arm of the sea: this part is now known by the name of the Dardanelles. The sea being thus made passable by the help of the bridge, the army, chariots, horses, &c. went over, as if the sea had been solid under them; therefore the poet says, Sepositum rotis solidum mare, the firm sea. HOL.

— We believe.] i. e. If we give credit to such historians.

177. Rivers failed, &c.] It is said that Xerxes's army was so numerous, as to drink up a river at once, whenever they made a meal. Herodot. l. ii.

— The Medes.] The Medes and Persians composed the army of Xerxes.

178. Soffratus.] A Greek poet, who wrote the Persian expedition into Greece.

— Wet wings.] The fancy of a poet may be compared to wings, wings, for it is by this he takes his flight into the regions of invention.—The fancy of Sostratus is here supposed to have been moistened with wine ; in short, that no man who was not drunk, which is signified by madidus, could ever have committed such improbabilities to writing.

179. What, &c.] What manner of man—qualis—How wretched, how forlorn, how changed from what he was! Comp. l. 185.

— That Barbarian.] Xerxes. See Sat. vi. l. 157, note.

— Salamis being left.] When he left and fled from Salamis, an island and city in the Ægean Sea, near which Themistocles, the Athenian general, overcame him in a sea-fight, and forced him to fly.

180. Rage with whips, &c.] When he found the sea raging, and, being raised by those winds, to have destroyed his bridge, he was mad enough to order the Hellespont to be scourged with three hundred lashes.—I don't read any where, but in this passage of Juvenal, of his whipping the winds.

181. Never suffered, &c.] The poet here alludes to Æn. i. l. 56—67. where Æolus is represented as holding the winds in prison, and giving them liberty to come forth as he pleased.

182. Who bound Ennosigæus, &c.] Xerxes was mad enough also to cast iron fetters into the sea, as if to bind Neptune in chains ; who was called Ennosigæus, the earth-shaker, from the notion that he presided over the waters of the sea, which made their way into the earth, and caused earthquakes.—From Gr. εννοσις, concuſſio, and γαια, terra. See Gellius. See the Orphic hymn, quoted in Parkh. Heb. Lex. under נָחַר, No 1.

183. Rather mild, &c.] The poet ironically says, “ that, to be sure, all this was very gentle in Xerxes, and, that he did not carry the matter farther, must be considered as very gracious in a man who might have thought proper to have marked him as his slave.” Stigma signifies a brand or mark set on the forehead of fugitive slaves, to which, no doubt, this passage alludes.

184. Any of the gods,] As well as Neptune, would, doubtless, without murmuring, have served so mild and gracious a prince!—Still speaking ironically, in derision of the pride and folly of Xerxes.

185. What manner, &c.] After all this extravagance of pride.—See note on l. 179.

— One vessel.] Navis signifies any vessel of the sea or river. The vessel in which Xerxes made his escape, after his defeat near Salamis, was a poor fishing-boat.

186. Bloody waves.] Made so by the slaughter of such numbers of the Persian army.

— Slow prow, &c.] The sea was so crowded with the floating carcases of the slain, that the boat could hardly make its way.

187. Glory, &c.] This haughty prince, who had collected so vast a force together, in order to carry on the war with the Athenians, begun by his father Darius, and invading Greece with seven hundred thousand men of his own kingdoms, three hundred thousand auxiliaries, and with twelve thousand ships, after beating Leonidas and taking Sparta, is defeated by Themistocles, his army cut to pieces, his fleet destroyed, and himself forced to escape in a wretched fishing-boat. All this might well be called the just demand of vengeance against his pride, and mad thirst after glory.

188. Give, &c.] The poet now satirizes the folly of wishing for long life: he supposes one praying for it.

189. Upright countenance, &c.] i. e. Looking up to heaven—pale, with fear of death, or lest the petition should be refused.

But,

He thought him.—Any of the gods would be willing to serve him.

But what manner of man returned he? Truly with one vessel in the 185

Full! See the countenance deform'd, and hideous beyond every thing,

And unlike itself, an unsightly hide instead of a skin:

And pendent cheeks, and such wrinkles,

As, where Tabracha extends its shady forests,

A mother-ape scratches in her old cheek, 195

But, perhaps, recto vultu may, here, be a phrase to express one in youth and health; and the following pallidus may denote a state of old age and sickness—comp. l. 191.

“Both sick and healthful, old and young, conspire
“In this one filly, mischievous desire.” DRYDEN.

192. Itself.] Its former self.

— Unsightly hide.] Here is a distinction between cutis and pellis, the former signifying the skin of a man, the other the hide of a beast; to the last of which, by an apt catachresis, the poet compares the coarse and rugged appearance of an old man's skin.

193. Pendent cheeks.] It is observable, that, in old persons, the cheeks, not only in that part of them which is immediately below the eyes, hang in purses downwards, but also in that part, which, in youth, forms the roundness, and contributes so much to the beauty and comeliness of the face, hang downwards in a relaxed and pendent state.

194. Tabracha, &c.] Now called Tunis, on the Mediterranean, near which was a wood, wherein was a vast quantity of apes.

195. Her old cheek.] Bucca properly signifies the cheek, or that part of it which swells out on blowing; but here it seems

(by synec.) to denote the whole face, every part of which, in the animal he speaks of, especially when old, is in a wrinkled state, Dryden has well preserved the humour of this simile.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw,
 For an old grandam-ape, when, with a grace,
 She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.

196. The differences, &c.] The poet is here to be understood as observing, that, however, in the days of youth, one is distinguishable from another by different beauties of countenance, and strength of body, old age renders all distinctions void ; and, in short, one old man is too like another to admit of them, both with respect to countenance and bodily strength.

199. Smooth head.] Bald with the loss of hair.

— Infancy, &c.] A running and drivelling nose, like a young child.

200. Unarm'd gum.] Having lost all his teeth, he has nothing left but his bare gums, to mumble his food withal.

202. The flatterer Cossus.] Captator signifies one who endeavourereth to get or procure any thing, particularly he who flattereth a man to be his heir. (See Sat. v. l. 98, note.) This mean occupation was frequent in Rome, and this Cossus seems to have self, so as to keep him away from paying his court.

203. The palate, &c.] Every thing now grows insipid; all difference of meats and drinks is lost. See this symptom of age mentioned by Barzillai, 2 Sam. xix. 35.

210. Another part.] The hearing.

211. A harper.] Citharædus denotes that species of musician, who sung, and played the harp at the same time.

— Seleucus.] A noted musician, who, according to the fashion of those times, wore a rich embroidered garment when he sang upon the stage. This is meant in the next line, by aurata lacerna, as not only the case of Seleucus, but of others. Of this incapacity for relishing music, Barzillai also speaks, 2 Sam.
xix. 35.

214. The cornets.] Cornicen (from cornu, an horn, and cano, to sing) signifies a blower on the horn, or cornet, the sound of which was, probably, very loud and harsh, as was that of the trumpets. If he be so deaf that he cannot hear these, he can't expect to hear the fingers, and the softer instruments.

215. Bawling, &c.] His boy must bawl as loud as he can into his ear, when he would tell him who called to visit him, or to let him know what o'clock it was. They had not watches and clocks as we have, but sun-dials and hour-glasses, which a boy was to watch, and acquaint the master how the time went.—

— Leap around, &c.] Surround him on all sides, ready to rush upon him, like wild beasts leaping on their prey.

— Form'd into a troop.] A whole troop of diseases, in array against him. Agmine facto. See Virg. Æn. i. 86. from whence our poet borrows this expression. See Sat. iii. 162, and note.

220. Hippia.] See Sat. vi. 82.—a woman famous for her debaucheries.

221. Themison.] A physician much commended by Pliny and Celsus, though here spoken of in no very favourable light.

Perhaps Juvenal gives this name to some empiric, in derision.

221. Autumn.] The autumn was usually a sickly time at Rome. See Sat. iv. l. 56, 57, and notes.

222. Allies, &c.] When the Romans had conquered any people, they reduced them into the form of a province, which, being subject to Rome, was governed by a Roman prætor, and the inhabitants were now called focii, allies, and, indeed, looked upon, in all respects, as such, not daring to refuse a confederacy with their conquerors. Basilus was one of these prætors, who shamefully plundered his province.

— Hirrus.] Some read Irus.—Whoever this was, his character is here noted, as a cheater and circumventer of youth, committed to his care and guardianship.

He that had the tuition of a ward was called tutor. The ward was called pupillus. The pupilli were orphans, who had lost their parents, and thus fell under the tuition of guardians, who frequently, instead of protecting them, plundered and cheated them out of their patrimony.

223. Maura.] See Sat. vi. l. 306, note.

224. Hamillus.] A schoolmaster, famous for unnatural practices with his scholars,

226. Who clipping.] See Sat. i. 25, and notes.

Cinnamus was a barber at Rome, who got a knight's estate, and, growing very rich, had several villas, and lived in a sumptuous manner; but, at last, he broke, and fled into Sicily. See Mart. vii. Epigr. 64.

227. One is weak, &c.] That host of diseases, mentioned l. 218—19. are here represented, as making their attacks on different parts of the body.

229. Of this.] Hujus—i. e. hominis.

— Take food, &c.] So feeble and childish that he can't feed himself, and is forced to be fed by another.

230. He, at the sight, &c.] As soon as supper is served, he, as it were mechanically, stretches open his jaws; but, unable to feed himself, he only gapes, like a young swallow in the nest, when it sees the old one flying towards it with food in her mouth. This natural image is beautifully expressed.

234. The names of servants.] The poet, here, brings his old man into the last stage of superannuation, when the understanding and memory fail, which, as he says, is worse than all the rest.

233—4. Neither knows.] i. e. Recollects; his memory now failing.

236. Brought up.] Though he has not only begotten, but brought up his children, so that they must have lived much with him, yet they are forgotten: he makes a will, by which he disinherits them, and leaves all he has to some artful strumpet who has got possession of him.

Who clipping, my beard, troublesome to me a youth,

One is weak in his shoulder, another in his loins, another in his hip,

Another has lost both his eyes, and envies the blind of one ;

The pale lips of this take food from another's fingers :

Jaw, only gapes, like the young one of a swallow, to whom
The fasting dam flies with her mouth full. But, than all

Of limbs, that want of understanding is greater, which neither

Knows the names of servants, nor the countenance of a friend,

With whom he supped the night before, nor those 235

Whom he hath begotten, whom brought up ; for, by a cruel will,

He forbids them to be his heirs ; all his goods are carried

To Phiale ; so much avails the breath of an artful mouth,

Which has stood for many years in the prison of a brothel.

236. A cruel will.] Codex, or caudex, literally means the trunk, stem, or body of a tree. Hence, by metonym. a table-book, made of several boards joined together, on which they used to write—hence any writing, as a deed, will, &c. See Sat. vii. 110.

237. Forbids them.] He excludes them from inheriting his estate—i. e. he disinherits them.

— Are carried.] Are disposed of, conveyed by the will.

238. To Phiale.] See above, l. 236, note the first.

— So much avails, &c.] Such an old dotard as this may be easily persuaded to any thing by an artful strumpet ; so great an ascendancy does she acquire over him by her artful and insinuating tongue.

239. Prison of a brothel.] Fornix—lit. an arch or vault in houses ; also, meton. a stew or brothel, because these were in vaults or wells under ground. ANSW. See Juv. Sat. vi. l. 130—1.

240. Tho' the senses, &c.] i. e. Yet allow him to retain his senses in full vigour, what grievous scenes of distress has he to go through!

— Children.] So Virg. Æn. vi. l. 308,

Impositisque rogis juvenes ante ora parentum.

241. To be attended.] Ducere funera is a phrase peculiarly adapted to the ceremony of funerals, and, probably, it is derived from a custom of the friends of the deceased walking in procession before the corpse. Sat. i. 146.—See Grang. in loc. “Ducere—verbum Sepulturæ. Albinov. ad Liviam. Funera ducuntur Romana per oppida Drusi.”

— The pile.] The funeral pile, on which the body was reduced to ashes.

242. Urns filled, &c.] i. e. With their bones and ashes, which it was customary to preserve in pots (after being gathered from the funeral pile) called urns.

243. This pain, &c.] This is the sad lot of long-lived people, as it must be their fate to outlive many of their friends.

243—4. Slaughter of the family, &c.] Some part or other of which is continually dropping off.

244. Many sorrows.] i. e. Bemoanings of the death of friends.

245. Black

Tho' the senses of the mind may be strong, yet funerals of

Are to be attended, the pile to be seen of a beloved Wife, and of a brother, and urns fill'd with sisters.

Perpetual grief, and in a black habit, they may grow old. 245
The Pylian king (if you at all believe the great Homer)

And who so often drank new must : I pray, attend 250

245. Black habit.] By this we find, that the wearing mourning for the loss of relations is very antient ; and that black was the colour which the antients used on such occasions. See Sat. iii. l. 213.

246. Pylian king.] Nestor, the king of Pylos, in Peloponnesus, who, according to Homer, is said to have lived three hundred years.

247. Second from a crow.] Cornix signifies a crow, or rook. This species of bird is fabled to live nine times the age of a man. Nestor (says the poet) stands second to this long-lived bird.

249. With the right.] The antients used to count their numbers with their fingers ; all under one hundred was counted on the left hand, all above on the right.

250. So often drank, &c.] Mustus signifies new wine. The vintage, when this was made, was in the autumn ; so that the poet, here, means to observe that Nestor lived for many returns of this season.

— Attend.] The poet calls for attention to what he is going to prove, by various examples, namely, that happiness does not consist in long life.

251—2. Laws of the fates.] The antients believed all things, even the gods themselves, to be governed by the fates. Old men, who were from various causes afflicted, might be apt to complain of their destiny, and Nestor among the rest.

252. Of too much thread.] The fates were supposed to be three

Antilochi barbam ardentem : nam quærit ab omni, Quisquis adest, socio, cur hæc in tempora duret ;
 Quod facinus dignum tam longo admiserit ævo. 255
 Hæc eadem Peleus, raptum cùm luget Achillem, Atque alius, cui fas Ithacum lugere natantem.
 Incolumi Trojâ Priamus venisset ad umbras

three sisters, who had all some peculiar business assigned them by the poets, in relation to the lives of men. One held the distaff, another spun the thread, and the third cut it.—q. d. How might he complain that the thread of his life was too long.

253. Antilochus.] The son of Nestor, slain, according to Homer, by Memnon, at the siege of Troy ; according to Ovid, by Hector. His beard burning—i. e. on the funeral pile. This mention of the beard implies, that he was now grown to man's estate.

— He demands, &c.] The poet here very naturally describes the workings and effects of grief, in the afflicted old man, who is now tempted to think, that his great age was granted him as a punishment for some greater crime than he could recollect to have committed, as he was permitted to live so sad an event as the death of his brave and beloved son. He is therefore represented as enquiring of his friends what could be the cause of his being reserved for such an affliction.

256. Peleus.] The father of Achilles, slain by Paris, who shot him in the heel in the temple of Apollo, the only part where he was vulnerable. His father Peleus had to lament his untimely death.

257. Another.] Laertes, a prince of Ithaca, father of Ulysses. He, during his son's absence, and wanderings over the seas, wearied himself with daily labour in husbandry, having no other attendant than an old maid-servant, who brought him food : during this period his constant petition to Jupiter was, that he might die.

— Swimming Ithacus.] Ulysses was called Ithacus, from Ithaca, a country of Ionia where he reigned. After the destruction of Troy, he suffered many toils and hardships, for ten years together, before his return home. The word natantem, perhaps, alludes to his shipwreck near the island of Calypso, where he was forced to swim to save his life ; or, perhaps, it may allude, in general, to the length of time he passed in sailing on the sea.

Brave Antilochus burning: he demands of every friend
 Which is present, why he should last till these times—
 What crime he had committed worthy so long life. 255
 The very same does Peleus, while he mourns Achilles snatch'd away,
 And another, to whom it was permitted to lament the swimming Ithacus.

258. Troy being safe.] i. e. Had Troy stood, and remained in safety.

— Priam.] The last king of Troy, who lived to see the city besieged by the Greeks for ten years together, and at length taken.

258—9. Shades of Asfaracus, &c.] Had joined his ancestors ghosts, or shades, in the infernal regions; i. e. had died in peace, and had been buried with the splendid funeral rites belonging to his rank. See Virg. Æn. i. 288; and AINSW. Asfaracus.

— Hector carrying, &c.] Among the antients, the corpse of the parent was carried forth to the funeral pile by the sons of the deceased. If Troy had remained in quiet, Priam's son Hector had not been slain by Achilles, but had survived his father, and have, as the custom was, been one of his bearers to the funeral pile.

260. The rest of the shoulders, &c.] Reliquis cervicibus—for cervicibus reliquorum, &c. Hypallage. According to Homer, Priam had fifty sons and twelve daughters; the former of which would have assisted Hector in carrying their father's corpse. Pliny says (Lib. vii. c. 44.) Quintus Metellus Macedonicus, a quatuor filiis illatus est rogo.

Priam was slain in the siege by Pyrrhus, the son of Achilles, and most of his children were destroyed. See Æn. ii. 501—54.

261. As soon as, &c.] This was the signal for the funeral procession to move forward towards the pile.

— Cassandra, &c.] She was the daughter of Priam and Hecuba. It was customary to hire women to mourn at burials, who went before the corpse to lament the dead: the chief of them who began the ceremony was called præfica (a præficio, planctuum princeps. AINSW.) This part must here most naturally

After the taking of Troy, ſhe fell to the ſhare of Agamemnon. She was married to Chorcæbus, and debauched by Ajax Oileus, in the temple of Minerva. See Æn. i. 44. and ii. 1. 403—7.

262. Polyxena, &c.] The daughter alſo of Priam, who gave her in marriage to Achilles; but he, coming into the temple of Apollo to perform the nuptial rites, was there treacherouſly ſlain by Paris. She was afterwards ſacrificed at the tomb of Achilles. See before, l. 256, note.

— Rent garment.] Rending the garments, in token of grief, was very antient.

263. Been extinct.] i. e. If he had died.

— At another time, &c.] i. e. Before Paris prepared to ſail into Greece, in order to raviſh Helen from her huſband Menelaüs. Had this been the caſe, Priam would have been borne to the grave by his ſons, and his funeral ſolemnized by the public lamentations of his daughters.

264. Daring ſhips.] So called, from the daring deſign they were employed in; the execution of which occaſioned the Trojan war, and the deſtruction of the country by the Greeks.

265. What therefore, &c.] The poet, here, applies this inſtance of old king Priam to his main argument againſt wiſhing to live to old age, ſeeing with how many ſorrows it may be accompanied.

266. Aſia falling.] See Virg. Æn. iii. l. 1. By Aſia is here meant the Leſſer Aſia, containing the Greater and Leſſer Phrygia, the kingdom of Priam.

267. Trembling

To utter the first wailings, and Polyxena with a rent garment,

Had he been extinct at another time, in which Paris

Had not begun to build the daring ships.

What therefore did long life advantage him? he saw all things 265

Overturn'd, and Asia falling by fire and sword.

Then, a trembling soldier, the diadem being laid aside, he bore arms,

And fell before the altar of high Jove, as an old ox,

Who, to the master's knife, offers his lean and miserable

Neck, now despised by the ungrateful plough. 270

However, that was the exit of a man: but his fierce wife,

Who outlived him, bark'd with a canine jaw.

I hasten to our own, and pass by the king of Pontus,

267. Trembling soldier.] Priam, now trembling, and almost worne out by age.

— Diadem laid aside.] Having laid aside all ensigns of royalty.

— Bore arms.] In defence of his country. See Æn. ii. 507—558. where these parts of Priam's history are described.

268. Fell before the altar.] Of Jupiter Herceus, erected by Priam in an open court belonging to the palace: hither he fled for succour and protection, but was slain by Pyrrhus. Æn. ii. 501—2.

270. Ungrateful plough.] Prosopopeia.—The plough is here represented as ungrateful—as forgetting the labours of the old worne-out ox, and despising him as now useless. Some understand aratro for agricolâ—meton.

271. Exit of a man.] He died, however, like a man—this was not the case of his wife.

— Fierce wife, &c.] i. e. Hecuba, wife of Priam, who, after the sacking of Troy, railed so against the Greeks, that she is feigned to have been turned into a bitch. Ovid. Met. Lib. xiii. l. 567—9.

273. To our own.] To mention instances and examples among our own people.

— The king of Pontus.] Mithridates, who maintained a long war with the Romans, but was at last routed by Pompey. He would have shortened his days by poison, but had so fortified himself by an antidote, invented by him, and which still bears

274. Cræsus, whom, &c.] Cræsus was the last king of Lydia, so rich, that Cræsi divitiæ was a proverbial saying. He asked Solon (one of the wise men of Greece, and lawgiver of the Athenians) who was the happiest man?—The philosopher told him—"no man could be said to be happy before death."—This, afterwards, Cræsus found to be true; for, being taken prisoner by Cyrus, and ordered to be burned, he cried out—"Solon! Solon! Solon!"—Cyrus asked the reason of this, and was told what Solon had said; whereupon, considering it might be his own case, he spared his life, and treated him with much respect.—Respicere—to consider—mind—regard.

276. Marshes of Minturnæ, &c.] Caius Marius being overcome in the civil war by Sylla, was forced to skulk in the marshes of Minturnæ, a city by the river Liris, where he was found, taken, and imprisoned; he then escaped into Africa, where he lived in exile, and begged his bread in the streets of Carthage, which had been conquered by the Romans.

278. Hence had their causes.] All these misfortunes were owing to Marius's living so long—he died in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

—Than that citizen.] i. e. Than Marius.

280. If—when, &c.] If when, in his triumph after conquering the Cimbri, he had numbers of captives led around his triumphal car, and amidst all the pomp and glory of victory, he had breathed out his mighty soul, as he descended, after the triumph was over, from his chariot, he had been the happiest man in

282. Teutonic chariot.] The Teutones were a people bordering on the Cimbri, conquered by Marius—the chariot in which Marius rode in his triumph over these people, is therefore called Teutonic, as used on that occasion.

283. Provident Campania.] When first Pompey engaged in the civil war against Cæsar, he had a violent fever at Naples, and another at Capua, of which he was like to have died:—these seem to have been provided against the miseries which afterwards befel him.

284. To be wished for.] In order to take him out of life, while he was great and happy.

285. Overcame them.] The united wishes and prayers of so many cities and people, for his recovery, prevailed against the effects of his sickness, and saved his life.

— His own fortune.] Which reserved him to be slain in his flight to Ægypt, after his defeat by Cæsar.

— That of the city.] Doomed to fall under the dominion of Pompey's enemy, after suffering so much by a civil war.

286. Took off, &c.] That life which had been preserved in a dangerous sickness (see note on l. 285.) was destroyed after his defeat, and his head severed from his body by Achilles and Salvius, sent for that purpose from Ptolemy, who intended it as a present to Cæsar.

Of Pompey's death, see Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. xiii. p. 217.

288. Catiline, &c.] The famous conſpirator, whoſe deſigns were detected and fruſtrated by Cicero, died in battle, without the loſs of any part of his body. See Salluſt. All theſe died young men, and thus were taken away from the miſeries which thoſe meet with who live to old age.

289. Moderate murmur.] The word murmur, here, implies that ſort of muttering which they uſed at their prayers to the gods ; this was louder, and more diſtinct, on ſome occaſions than on others, according to the degree of fervency in the ſuppliant. Comp. Perf. Sat. ii. 6—8.

— Anxious mother, &c.] The poet here repreſents another popular folly, in ſuppoſing a mother anxious for having handſome children, and praying for this at the ſhrine of Venus, the fabled goddeſs of beauty.

291. Even to the delight, &c.] So that the higheſt and fondeſt of them might be gratified, and the delight of their accompliſhment be equal to that which ſhe felt in making them.

292. Blame me ?] A queſtion ſuppoſed from the mother to the poet, on his finding fault with her for what ſhe did.

— Latona rejoices, &c.] She defends what ſhe does by quoting an example.—Latona, daughter of Cœus, one of the Titans, bore, to Jupiter, Apollo and Diana at the ſame birth.

293. Lucretia forbids, &c.] The poet answers the example brought for aſking beautiful children, by the inſtance of Lucretia, whoſe beauty proved her undoing. She was a beautiful Roman Should you blame me ? Latona rejoices in fair Diana.

Roman lady, the daughter of Lucretius, præfect of the city, and wife of Tarquinius Collatinus, ravished by Sextus Tarquinius, son of Tarquinius Superbus, which she so resented, that she sent for her father and husband, and stabbed herself before them. The people of Rome, on this, rose in arms, expelled the Tarquins, and changed the monarchy to a commonwealth.

294. Virginia.] A Roman virgin exceedingly beautiful, whom her own father, to prevent her being exposed to the lust of Appius, one of the Decemviri, stabbed in the middle of the forum.

294—5. Rutila.] An ugly deformed old woman, above seventy-seven years old, as Pliny says, was in no danger of such a death, and therefore happier in her deformity than Virginia in her beauty ; so that the latter might have gladly changed her person for that of Rutila.

295. But a son, &c.] i. e. A son with an accomplished and beautiful person, makes his parents unhappy, and keeps them in perpetual fear, so very rarely do beauty and modesty meet together.

296. Person.] The word corporis, which literally signifies the body, is here used for the whole person of the man, per synec.

of the old Sabines—(see Sat. vi. l. 162—3.)—transmitting modesty and chastity by their own examples also.

300. Glowing, &c.] Easily blushing at every species of indecency.

303. More powerful, &c.] i. e. Who is more powerful than all outward restraints.—q. d. Natural good dispositions are more powerful preservatives against vice, than all the watchfulness and care of guardians and parents.

304. Must not be men.] If they are to escape “the pollutions” that are in the world through lust, they must die young, and not live to be men.

— The prodigal improbity, &c.] The offers of those who would corrupt their chastity, and who think no prodigality too great to seduce youth, will even attempt to corrupt the parents themselves, by bribing them, at any price, over to their side. Such is their extravagant wickedness.

306. Confidence in bribes.] So thoroughly persuaded are they that a bribe will carry their point.

— No tyrant, &c.] The poet shews another danger arising from beauty, namely, that of being taken into the palaces of princes and great men, where they were kept for unnatural purposes, and castrated, in order to make their voices like those of women; now this might be the consequence of being handsome, but no deformed and ugly youth was ever served so. See Sat. vi. 368—72.

That pain exafts more than any law to pain 315

308. Nero ravifh, &c.] Alluding to the horrid amours of Nero with Sporus, whom he drefled in woman's apparel, and is faid to have married. See Sat. i. 60, note.

309. A wen.] Struma fignifies a fwelling, or wen, arifing from a fcapulous habit, like what we call the king's evil. Strumofus, one that has this diforder.

— Swelling, &c.] i. e. Pot-bellied and hump-backed.

310. Go now, &c.] An ironical apoftrophe to the mother (fee l. 289—91.) who is wifhing for beautiful children.

311. Greater dangers, &c.] The older he grows, the more dangers will he be expofed to, even greater than thofe already mentioned.

— He will become, &c.] He will intrigue with married women, and, on deteftion by the hufbands, be expofed to all the fuffering which their rage and jealousy may inflict.

313. Happier than the ftar, &c.] As all deftiny was fupposed to be governed by the ftars, fo the word ftar (per metonym.) may fignify deftiny.—Will he have better luck than Mars, who, when in an amour with Venus, was furprifed by her hufband Vulcan, who inclofed them with a net, and expofed them to the fight of all the gods.

315. That pain.] Which an adulterer may have inflicted on him by an enraged hufband.

Concessit. necat hic ferro, secat ille cruentis
 Verberibus, quosdam mœchos & mugilis intrat.
 Sed tuus Endymion dilectæ fiet adulter

 Deterior totos habet illic fœmina mores.
 Sed casto quid forma nocet? quid profuit olim
 Hippolyto grave propositum? quid Bellerophonti? 325

315. When any law, &c.] i. e. The pain which the gallant may suffer from the husband may possibly exceed any that the law would inflict, or has allowed, for such an offence.

316. With a sword.] Ferrum means any tool or weapon made with iron.—There seems here to be an imitation of Hor. Lib. i, Sat. ii. l. 40—46.

316—17. With bloody scourges.] i. e. Most barbarously flogs the gallant with scourges, the blood following the strokes—

——Ille flagellis

Ad mortem cæsus.

HOR. ubi supr.

317. The mullet, &c.] This was a punishment sometimes inflicted on adulterers, when caught in the fact, and must be attended with the most excruciating pain. It was done by thrusting the fish up the fundament, and then drawing it out, with the fins laying hold of and tearing the part.

318. But your Endymion.] Another ironical apostrophe to the mother. See before, note on l. 310.

Endymion was a shepherd, fabled to have been fallen in love with by Cynthia, or the moon, who, that she might kiss him, laid him asleep on Mount Latmus, in Caria, near the coast of the Archipelago.

The poet uses the name Endymion, here, in derision of the mother, whom he supposes to be so fond of her son, and so pleased with his beauty, as to think him as handsome, at least, as Endymion himself, and as likely to excite the love of some favourite lady, as Endymion was to excite the love of Cynthia, and who will think to have him all to herself.—No, says the poet, this will only last till some lucrative temptation comes in his way, and then he will be as bad as others, and just as profligate—for

319. When Servilia, &c.] This name may here be put for any lewd and profligate adulteress, who hired lovers for her pleasures. There may probably be an allusion to Servilia, the mother

Has granted. One kills with a sword, another cuts with Scourges, and some adulterers the mullet enters.

ther of Brutus, and sister of Cato, with whom Cæsar lived in illicit commerce.

When such a one pays him well, however he may dislike her person, he will be at her service.

320. Put off, &c.] She will strip herself of all her jewels and finery, part with every thing that's valuable, to supply the means of rewarding her lover.

322. Hippia.] See Sat. vi. 82—112. A prodigal adulteress.

— Catulla.] See Sat. ii. 49. A poor harlot.

q. d. However different in their circumstances, they will all meet in this point, viz. to spare nothing where a lover is in question.

323. There a bad woman.] On that one principle of self-gratification she forms all her conduct—there she shews herself kind, generous, and liberal, however worse in general than others.

324. How does beauty, &c.] Granting that beauty may be pernicious, in instances like those above mentioned, yet how can it injure the chaste and virtuous ?

325. A solemn resolution, &c.] This was the solemn resolve of Hippolytus, to refuse the love of his step-mother Phædra, who, for this, accused him of tempting her to incest. He fled away in a chariot by the sea-side, but the horses taking fright at the sea-calves lying on the shore, overturned the chariot, and killed him.

— Bellerophon ?] Sthenobœa (the wife of Pœtus, king of the Argives) falling in love with him, he refused her; at which she was so incensed, that she accused him to her husband: this forced him upon desperate adventures, which he overcame. Sthenobœa, hearing of his success, killed herself.

326. This redded, &c.] Phædra reddened with anger and resentment, as thinking herself despised.

327. Sthenobœa, &c.] See note on l. 325.

— The Cretan.] Phædra was the daughter of Minos, king of Crete.

— Both.] Phædra and Sthenobœa.

328. Vexed themselves.] Concussère.—The verb concutio, literally signifies to shake, jog, or stir; and, when applied to the mind, to trouble, vex, or disquiet. Here it intimates, that these women shook, or stirred themselves, into a fit of rage and vexation. It seems to be used metaphorically, from the custom of the wrestlers and boxers at the theatres, who, before they engaged, gave themselves blows on the breast, or sides, to excite anger and fury. Thus the lion is said to shake his mane, and lash himself with his tail, when he would be furious.

— Most cruel, &c.] A woman is then most savage and relentless, when, on being disappointed, the fear of shame adds spurs to her resentment, and her passion of love is changed to hatred. See Gen. xxxix. 7—20.

Virgil represents Juno, as stirred up to her relentless hatred to Æneas, and the Trojans, from several motives; among the rest, from the contempt which had been shewn her by Paris, in his judgment against her at Mount Ida.

Necdum etiam causæ irarum, sævique dolores,
 Exciderant animo, manet alta mente repòstum
 Judicium Paridis, spretæque injuria formæ,

&c. &c.

Æn. i. 29, 30, 31.

See also Æn. v. 5—7.

329. Chuse,

Truly this redden'd as if scorned by a repulse :
 Nor 'was Sthenobœa less on fire than the Cretan, and both Vexed themselves. A woman is then most cruel
 When shame adds goads to hatred. Chuse what

Rite : the soothsayer, with the signers, will come.

329. Chuse, &c.] i. e. Think it over, and determine, all things considered, what advice you would give.

330. To him whom, &c.] Silius is meant here, a noble Roman, whom the empress Messalina so doted upon, that she made him put away his wife Julia Syllana, and resolved to marry him in the absence of her husband, the emperor Claudius, who was gone no farther than Ostia, a city near the mouth of the Tiber.

333. By the eyes, &c.] By her having fixed her eyes upon him, so as to become enamoured with him.—Of the horrid lewdness of this empress, see Sat. vi. 115—31.

— Long she sits, &c.] The time seems long to her, while waiting for Silius.

333—4. Prepared bridal veil.] Which she had prepared for the ceremony. See Sat. ii. l. 124, note on the word flammea; and Sat. vi. 224.

334. Openly, &c.] She transacts the matter openly, without fear or shame; accordingly she omits nothing of the marriage ceremony—she put on the flame-coloured marriage-veil—the conjugal bed was sumptuously adorned with purple, and prepared in the Lucullan gardens, a place of public resort. See note on l. 338.

335. Ten times an hundred.] She had her portion ready, according to antient custom. On this instance it amounted to the vast sum of one thousand sester tia. See Sat. i. l. 106, note. This was supposed to be given to the husband, in consideration of the burdens of matrimony.

336. Soothsayer, signers, &c.] The soothsayer, who always attended on such occasions. Valer. Lib. ii. says, that, among the antients, nothing of consequence was undertaken, either in private private or public, without consulting the auspices—hence a soothsayer attended on marriages. Auspex—quasi avis pex—because they divined from the flight and other actions of birds.

The signatores were a sort of public notaries, who wrote and attested wills, deeds, marriage-settlements, &c. These also were present; for, before the marriage, they wrote down in tables (tabulis—see Sat. ii. 58, note) by way of record, the form of the contract, to which they, with the witnesses, set their seals.

337. These things secret, &c.] That she does things privately, so that only a few chosen secret friends should know them? by no means.

338. Unless lawfully.] She determines to marry publicly, with all the usual forms and ceremonies; and this, says Tacitus, in the face of the senate, of the equestrian order, and of the whole people and soldiery. See Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. xiv, p. 344, note I.

— Say, what like you?] Quid placeat—what it may please you to do.—Say, Silius, which part will you take in such a situation—what do you think best to do, under so fatal a dilemma?

339. Unless, &c.] If you refuse this horrid woman's offer, she will have you murdered before night.

340. If you commit the crime.] Of marrying the wife of another.

— A little delay, &c.] You will probably live for a few days; the public rumour will reach the prince's ears, though later than the ears of others, as he will probably be the last who hears of the dishonour done to his family, few, perhaps, daring to break such a thing to him.

343. The command.] Of Messalina.

— If the life of a few days, &c.] If you think that living a few

Do you think these things secret, and committed to a few?
She will not marry unless lawfully. Say—what like you?—
Unless you will obey, you must perish before candle-light.

If you commit the crime, a little delay will be given, till the thing, 340

(He will last know the disgrace of his house). In the mean while

Do thou obey the command, if the life of a few days is
Of such consequence; whatever you may think best and

This fair and white neck is to be yielded to the sword. 345 Shall men therefore wish for nothing? If you will have advice,

MAY SUIT US, AND BE USEFUL TO OUR AFFAIRS.

a few days more or less is of so much consequence, that you will sooner commit a crime of such magnitude to gain a short respite, than risque an earlier death, by avoiding the commission of it, then to be sure you must obey; but whichever way you determine—

345. Neck, &c.] This beautiful person of yours will be sacrificed—either to Messalina's resentment, if you don't comply, or to the emperor's, if you do. However, the marriage took place, and they pleased themselves in all festivity that day and night; afterwards Silius was seized, by the emperor's command, and put to death—thus exhibiting a striking example of the sad consequences which often attend being remarkable for beauty. Messalina, soon after, was killed in the gardens of Lucullus, whither she had retired. See Univ. Ant. Hist. vol. xiv.
p. 348—9.

346. Shall men therefore, &c.] If all you say be considered, the consequence seems to be, that it is wrong to wish, or pray, for any thing.

— Have advice.] If you will be advised what is best to do, I answer—

347. Permit the gods, &c.] Leave all to the gods; they know what is best for us, and what is most suitable to our circumstances and situations.

349. Instead

Nam pro jucundis aptissima quæque dabunt Dî.

349. Instead of pleasant things, &c.] They can, though we cannot, foresee all consequences which will arise, and therefore, instead of bestowing what may be pleasing, they will give what is most proper, most suitable, and best adapted to our welfare; and this, because mortals are dearer to them than we are to ourselves. Comp. 1 Pet. v. 7.

349—50. By the impulse, &c.] We are impelled to wish for things, merely from the strong desire we have to possess them; and do not reflect, as we ought, on the blindness of our minds, which cannot see farther than present things, and therefore are led to judge amiss of what may be for our good in the end.

352. Wedlock, and bringing forth, &c.] We pray for a wife, and that that wife may bring forth children; but the gods only can foresee how either the wife or children may turn out, consequently, whether the gratification of our wishes may be for our happiness.

354. Ask something.] In the former part of this fine passage, the poet speaks of leaving all to the gods, in such an absolute and unreserved manner, as seemingly to exclude the exercise of prayer: as to outward things, such as power, riches, beauty, and the like, he certainly does, inasmuch as these matters ought to be left entirely to Providence, we not being able to judge about them; and, indeed, as he has shewn throughout the preceding part of the Satire, the having these things may prove ruinous and destructive, therefore are not proper subjects either of desire or prayer: but now the poet finely shews, that there are subjects of prayer, which are not only desirable, but to be petitioned for, as conducive to our real good and happiness.

— Vow in chapels.] Sacellum signifies a chapel, a little temple, or perhaps any place consecrated to divine worship. Here it may signify the sacred shrines of their gods, before which they offered their vows, prayers, and sacrifices.

For, instead of pleasant things, the gods will give whatever are fittest.

MAN IS DEARER TO THEM, THAN TO HIMSELF: we, led by the 350

Impulse of our minds, and, by a blind, and great desire, Ask wedlock, and the bringing forth of our wife: but to

However, that you may ask something, and vow in chapels
Entrails, and the divine puddings of a whitish swine, 355
YOU MUST PRAY, THAT YOU MAY HAVE A SOUND MIND IN A SOUND BODY.

Ask a mind, strong, and without the fear of death;
Which puts the last stage of life among the gifts of

355. Entrails.] The bowels, or inwards, of animals, which were execta (unde exta) cut out, and offered in sacrifice.

— Divine puddings, &c.] Tomacula, or tomacla, from Gr. τμήνω, to cut, were puddings, or sausages, made of the liver and flesh of the animal, chopped and mixed together, and were called also farcimina—gut-puddings; and, like our sausages, were made by stuffing a gut taken from the animal with the above ingredients. These accompanied the sacrifices, and were therefore called divipe.

— Whitish swine.] This was offered to Diana, under the name of Lucina, in order to make her propitious to child-bearing women, as also on other occasions. See Hor. Lib. iii.
Ode xxii.

356. You must pray, &c.] As if the poet had said—"I by "no means object either to sacrifices or prayers to the gods—
"provided what is asked be reasonable and good, we cannot be "too earnest."

— A sound mind, &c.] q. d. Health of body and mind is the first of blessings here below—without a sound mind we can neither judge, determine, or act aright—without bodily health there can be no enjoyment.

357. A mind strong, &c.] Fortitude, by which, unmoved and undismayed, you can look upon death without terror.

358. The last stage, &c.] Ultimum spatium, in the chariot and horse-racing, signified the space between the last bound or mark, and the goal where the race ended. Hence, by an easy metaphor,

Naturæ, qui ferre queat quoscunque labores ;
 Nesciat irasci ; cupiat nihil ; & potiores 360
 Herculis ærumnas credat, sævosque labores, Et Venere, & cœnis & plumis Sardanapali.
 Monstro, quod ipse tibi possis dare : Semita certè TRANQUILLÆ PER VIRTUTEM PATET UNICA VITÆ.

metaphor, it denotes the latter part of life, when we are near our end, and are about to finish our course of life.

So the apostle, 2 Tim. iv. 7. says—τον δρόμον τέτελικα—I have finished my course.

358—9. Gifts of nature.] The word munus either signifies a gift, or a duty of office. If we take munera, here, in the former sense, we must understand the poet to mean, that true fortitude, so far from fearing death as an evil, looks on it as a gift or blessing of nature. So Mr. Dryden—

A soul that can securely death defy,
 And count it nature's privilege to die.

In the other sense, we must understand the poet to mean, that death will be looked upon, by a wise and firm mind, as an office, or duty, which all are to fulfil, and therefore to be submitted to as such, not with fear and dismay, but with as much willingness and complacency as any other duty which nature has laid upon us.

359. Any troubles, &c.] Any misfortunes, without murmuring and repining, much less sinking under them.

360. Knows not to be angry.] Can so rule the tempers and passions of the soul, as to controul, on all occasions, those perturbations which arise within, and produce a violence of anger.

— Covets nothing.] Being content and submissive to the will of Providence, desires nothing but what it has, neither coveting what others have, or uneasy to obtain what we ourselves have not.

361. The toils of Hercules, &c.] Alluding to what are usually called—the twelve labours of Hercules.

362. Than the lasciviousness, &c.] Such a mind as has been described, esteems the greatest sufferings and labours, even such as Hercules underwent, more eligible than all the pleasures and enjoyments of sensuality.

— Sardanapalus.] The last king of Assyria, whose life was such a scene of lasciviousness, luxury, and effeminacy, that he fell into the utmost contempt in the eyes of his subjects, who revolted ; and he, being overcome, made a pile, set it on fire, and burnt himself, and his most valuable moveables, in it :
 “ The only thing (says Justin) he ever did like a man.”

As

Nature; which can bear any troubles whatsoever; Knows not to be angry; covets nothing; and which thinks 360

The toils of Hercules, and his cruel labours, better Than the lasciviousness, and luxury, and plumes of Sardanapalus.

I shew what yourself may give to yourself: SURELY THE ONLY

PATH TO A QUIET LIFE LIES OPEN THROUGH VIRTUE.

As the word venere, in this line, is metonymically used for lewdness, or lasciviousness, Venus being the goddess of these, and cœnis for all manner of gluttony and luxury, so plumis may here be used to denote softness and effeminacy of dress.

Plumæ, in one sense, is used sometimes to denote plates, scales, or spangles, wrought on the armour or accoutrements of men or horses, one whereof was laid upon another. Garments also were adorned with gold and purple plumage, feather-work. AINSW. See Æn. xi. l. 770—1.

363. What yourself may give, &c.] While others are disquieting themselves, and asking for the gratification of their foolish and hurtful desires, let me tell you the only way to solid peace and comfort, and what it is in your own power to bestow upon yourself—I mean, and it is most certainly true, that there is no other way to happiness, but in the paths of virtue. Comp. Eccl. xii. 13, 14. The heathen thought that every man was the author of his own virtue and wisdom—but there were some at Rome, at that time, who could have taught Juvenal, that—EVERY GOOD GIFT, AND EVERY PERFECT GIFT, IS FROM ABOVE, AND COMETH DOWN FROM THE FATHER OF LIGHTS.—Comp. Jer. x. 23.

Hor. Lib. i. Epist. xviii. l. 111—12, says—

Sed satis est orare Jovem qui donat & aufert, Det vitam, del opes, æquum mi animum ipse parabo.

Cic. Nat. Deorum, Lib. iii. c. xxxvi. declares it as a general opinion, that mankind receive from the gods the outward conveniences of life—virtutem autem nemo unquam acceptam Deo retulit—"but virtue none ever yet thought they received from the Deity." And again—"this is the persuasion of all, that fortune is to be had from the gods, wisdom from ourselves." Again—"who ever thanked the gods for his being a good man?" "men pray to Jupiter, not that he would make them just, temperate, wise, but rich and prosperous." Thus—"they became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was Vol. II. F "darkened;

Nullum numen habes, si sit prudentia : sed te 365
Nos facimus, Fortuna, deam, cœloque locamus.

“darkened; professing themselves to be wise, they became “fools.” Rom. i. 21—2.

365. You have no deity, &c.] If men would act prudently and wisely, we should no more hear of good or ill luck, as if the affairs of men were left to the disposal of Fortune, or chance, who manages them in a way of sport and caprice, independently of any endeavours of their own—ludum insolentem ludere peritax. (See Hor. Lib. iii. Ode, l. 49—52.) The goddess Fortune would no longer be a divinity in the eyes of mortals, if they were themselves prudent and careful in the management of themselves and their affairs.

It is not easy to do justice to the word numen, in this place, by any single one in the English language; at least I am not acquainted with any that can at once comprehend all its meanings: it includes the will, pleasure, and determination or decree of a deity—power, authority, a divine impulse—divine protection and favour—influence—also a deity, a god;—all this the heathen attributed to their goddess FORTUNE.

366. Thus we make a goddess, &c.] The ancient Greeks and Romans made a goddess of Fortune, which is, in reality, nothing more than a sudden and unexpected event of things—from FORS, luck, chance, hazard. These the heathen, who knew not GOD, deified in the imaginary being FORTUNE, which they substituted in the place of that wise, though mysterious, government of the world, and all things in it, by HIM “whose judgments are unsearchable, and whose ways are past finding out!”—He has given to man, that “wisdom which is profitable to direct” (Eccl. x. 10.) in the affairs and concerns of common life; the due and proper exercise of which is the duty of man towards himself. This neglected, leaves him without excuse, whatever evil may happen: yet, under the strictest exercise of human wisdom and prudence, let us remember, that disappointment may defeat the ends proposed—this ought to awaken our confidence in the SUPREME DISPOSER OF ALL EVENTS, who knows what is best for us—

“And that should teach us,

“Rough-hew them how we will.”

HAMLET, Act v. Sc. ii.

The Greeks had many temples dedicated to Fortune, under the name of ΤΥΧΗ. Pindar makes her one of the destinies, the daughter of Jupiter. Ancus Martius, king of the Romans, first built a temple at Rome to this deity. Servius Tullus also built one at the capitol. Afterwards the Romans consecrated temples to her under various titles, as Fortuna libera, redux, publica, lica, equestris, &c. See BROUGHTON, Bibl. Hist. Sacr. tit. FORTUNE.

Horace's description of this goddess, and her great power, forms one of the most beautiful of his odes. See Lib. i. Ode xxxv.

O Diva gratum quæ regis Antium, Præfens, &c. &c.

366. Place in heaven.] Give her a place among the gods—q. d. As things are, men are foolish enough to erect temples to Fortune, make her a goddess, worship her as such, and attribute all their miscarriages and troubles, not to their own neglect, folly, and mismanagement, but to the power and influence of this imaginary deity.

For the ideas which the Romans entertained about the goddess Fortune, see Sat. iii. l. 39. 40. Sat. vi. l. 604—8.

I should observe, that some copies read, l. 365,

Nullum numen abest, &c. No deity is absent, &c.

As if it were said, that if there be prudence, that is, if a man acts wisely and prudently, all the gods are present with him, not one absents himself from him; or, prudence is all-sufficient, and no other deity can be wanting. But the sense first above given, on the reading—nullum numen habes—appears to be most consonant to the intension of the two lines taken together.

I know not how to end my observations on this Tenth Satire of Juvenal, without calling it the finest piece, in point of composition, matter, and sentiment, which we have derived from heathen antiquity.—I should call it inimitably fine, had not the late Dr. SAMUEL JOHNSON'S poem, on "THE VANITY OF HUMAN WISHES," appeared—such a copy, of such an original, is rarely to be met with.

END OF THE TENTH SATIRE.

S A T I R A XI.

A R G U M E N T.

The Poet takes occasion, from an invitation which he gives to his friend Persicus to dine with him, to commend frugality, and to expose and reprehend all manner of intemperance and debauchery; but more particularly the luxury used by the Romans in their feasting. He instances some lewd practices at their feasts, and reproves the nobility for making lewdness

Line 1. If Atticus, &c.] The name of a very eminent person in Rome ; but, here, it is meant to signify any one of great wealth and quality. If such a one gives a great entertainment, it being agreeable to his rank and fortune, deserves not any other name than that of splendour and munificence.

2. If Rutilus, &c.] One, who, by his extravagant gluttony, was reduced to the most shameful degree of poverty.

This, likewise, is here made use of as a common name for all such characters.

If such a one make a splendid feast, we must call him mad.

2—3. A greater laugh, &c.] What can be a greater subject of ridicule among the vulgar, than Apicius in rags ?

3. Apicius.] A noted epicure in the time of Nero ; he spent an immense estate in eating and drinking : growing poor and despised, he hanged himself. See Sat. iv. l. 23.

4. Company.] Convictus signifies a living together in one house, or at one table, and, perhaps, what we call clubs, or ordinaries.

— Baths.] Thermæ—hot baths. These were much resorted and debauchery the chiefest of their pleasures. He opposes the temperance and frugality of the greatest men in former ages, to the riot and intemperance of the present. He concludes with repeating his invitation to his friend, advising him to a neglect of all care and disquiet for the present, and a moderate use of pleasures for the future.

IF Atticus sups sumptuously, he is accounted splendid :
 If Rutilus, mad : for what is received with a greater Laugh of the vulgar, than poor Apicius ? every sorted to, and were places of great gossiping and tattling. See Sat. vii. l. 233, and note.

 Of Rutilus. For while his strong and youthful limbs 5

4. The stations.] Particular places in the city, where idle people used to meet and talk together, perhaps about the market-place, or forum ; as in our towns, where there are commonly a number of idle people standing and talking together, in and near the market-place. See ANSW. Statio, N° 6.

5. Of Rutilus.] De—about or concerning Rutilus.—q. d. He is the common subject of conversation at all these places.

— Youthful limbs, &c.] While in the prime of life, and fit to bear arms in the laudable service of his country, he is so reduced to poverty, by his luxury and extravagance, as to apply himself to the wretched trade of a fencer, or prize-fighter, for bread.

6. He is reported.] Or fertur may mean he is carried, by the necessity of his circumstances, to copy out the laws, rules, words of command (regia verba) and other matters of knowledge, necessary to make him a fencer, that he may be thoroughly qualified for the art.

7. The tribune not compelling, &c.] Hinting, that, though he was not compelled to such a practice of fencing, by the magistracy, as many had been by Nero for his inhuman diversion, yet it was a shame that he was suffered to undertake it, and not advised, or commanded, by the magistracy, to the contrary. See Sat. viii. 193.

9. You see many, &c.] Such fellows as Rutilus.

— Often-eluded creditor.] Who had been often promised payment, but deceived over and over again; and who in vain had pursued them to come at his money.

10. Wait for, &c.] Knowing no place so likely to find them at, as in their way to the market for provisions, at the entrance to which he places himself, in hopes to catch them, before they had spent the little remains of his money that he had lent them.

11. The purpose, &c.] Who have no other design, or end of living, but eating and drinking.

12. The most wretched, &c.] When they are visibly falling into ruin, even the most wretched of them will live more expensively than ever, thinking, perhaps, to put a good face on the matter, the better to conceal their situation, and thus to maintain their credit some little time longer; or, perhaps, from mere desperation, seeing it is too late to retrieve their affairs, and they can be but ruined.—This is no uncommon thing in our day.

14. Meantime.] While they have any thing left.

— They seek, &c.] They ransack, as it were, earth, air, and water, for flesh of beasts, fowl, and fish, for dainties to please their taste.

15. The

(The tribune not compelling indeed, but neither prohibiting)
To be about to write the laws, and princely words of a sencer.
Moreover, you see many, whom the often-eluded creditor is wont

To wait for at the very entrance of the shambles, 10
And to whom the purpose of living is in the palate alone.
The most wretched of these, and now soon to fall (his Ruin already being clear) sups the more elegantly, and the better.

Meantime, they seek a relish thro' all the elements,
The prices never opposing their inclination: if you at-

ARE BOUGHT FOR MORE.

Therefore it is not difficult to procure a sum that will be

And, for four hundred sesterces, to season a relishing

15. The prices, &c.] They never consider or scruple the price which they are to pay—these do not stand in their way.

16. More intimately, &c.] More closely to the dispositions of such.

— Please more, &c.] The dish pleases best that is dearest bought; therefore, i. e. to gratify their gluttony—

17. It is not difficult.] They make no sort of difficulty of procuring money, by pawning what they have.

— Be wasted, &c.] Which will soon be gone, squandered away presently.

18. Dishes pawned.] Lanx signifies, literally, a great broad plate, a deep dish, or platter, to serve meat up in. Here, by lancibus, perhaps, is to be understood his plate in general, his family-plate, per synec. This he sends to the pawnbrokers to raise money upon for the present supply of his extravagance.

— Broken image, &c.] A family bust, or statue, broken to pieces that it may not be known, and pawned for the value of the gold or silver only.

19. Four hundred sesterces, &c.] When so many nummi are mentioned, sesterces (sestertii) are usually understood; the sestertius is often called absolutely nummus, because it was in most frequent use. Also, sestertius nummus, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. of our money. See Kennet, Book v. Part ii. p. 13. Four hundred of these (about 2 l. 10 s.) were laid out in seasoning a single dish.

20. Earthen dish.] Having pawned their plate, they are reduced to earthen-ware. The dish is put here, by meton. for its contents.

— To the diet, &c.] Miscellanea—a mixture of things without any order, a gallimawfry, an hotchpotch, such as the sword-players and prize-fighters used to eat.—From their dainties they are at last reduced to the coarse diet, as well as to the mean occupation, of a common prize-fighter. See l. 5, and note 2.

Ludi, for ludii, the gen. of ludius—a stage-player, dancer, sword-player, and the like, who play on a stage.

21. It importeth, therefore.] q. d. Therefore, that we may judge aright, and not indiscriminately, it importeth us to consider, who gives the entertainment, what are his circumstances—for that may be praise-worthy in those who can afford it, which is highly vicious, and blameable, in those who cannot.

— In Rutilus.] Above mentioned. See note on l. 2.—To live splendidly, would, in such a one as Rutilus, deserve the name of extravagance and luxury, because he is poor, and can't afford it.

22. Ventidius.] A noble Roman, who lived hospitably.

— A laudable name.] The entertainments given by such a one are deservedly styled generous and magnificent,

23. Derives its fame.] The commendation which is justly bestowed upon it—its praise.

— From his income.] From the great estate of the giver, who only lives in a magnificence suitable to his income.

23—4. By right, despise, &c.] Or justly, for he deserves it.

24. Atlas.] See Sat. viii. l. 32, note.

26. A

Earthen dish : thus they come to the diet of a prize-fighter. 20

It importeth, therefore, who may prepare these same things—for, in Rutilus,

It is luxury ; in Ventidius a laudable name
It takes, and derives its fame from his income. I should, by right, Despise him, who knows how much higher Atlas is Than all the mountains in Libya, yet this same person 25

Be ignorant, how much a little bag differs from an Iron chest : KNOW THYSELF—descended from heaven,
To be fixed, and revolved in the mindful breast, whether You may seek wedlock, or would be in a part of

26. A little bag.] Sacculus—a little bag, pouch, or purse, in which money is put.

27. Iron chest.] The rich used to keep their money in large chests armed with iron, to prevent their being broken open and robbed.

The poet means, that if a man has sense enough to distinguish the size of Atlas from that of other mountains which are inferior in size, and, at the same time, is foolish enough not to see the difference between his own narrow circumstances, and the fortunes of the rich, so as to regulate his manner of living accordingly, he is very deserving of the utmost contempt.

— Know thyself.] γνῶθι σεαυτόν.—This was a saying of Chilon the Lacedemonian, and a very important one ; for on self-knowledge depends all other that can contribute to the right management and direction of human life : for no man, endowed with this, would plunge himself into difficulties, by undertaking what is beyond the reach of his abilities, either of mind, body, or estate. This apothegm of Chilo's was, with others, written up in golden letters at the temple of Apollo, at Delphos, and was therefore believed to come from heaven. Not but it is very sound theology, to say, that, to have the veil of pride and self-love taken away, so that we know ourselves aright, is the gift of God, and the foundation of all true and saving knowledge. See Jer. xvii. 9, 10.

28. Fixed, and revolved, &c.] As a constant maxim, and principle of action, and, as such, we should ever be mindful of it. Traeto—lit. signifies to handle, which, in a mental sense, by analogy, may signify to revolve in the mind.

29. Wedlock.] This instance of private and domestic concern may

Esse velis, nec enim lorica possit Achilles 30
 Therſites, in quā se traducebat Ulyſſes
 Ancipitem : seu tu magno discrimine causam
 Protegere affectas ; te consule, dic tibi quis sis ;
 Orator vehemens, an Curtius, an Matho. buccæ
 Noscenda est mensura tuæ, spectandaque rebus 35
 In summis, minimisque ; etiam cum piscis emetur :
 Nec mullum cupias, cum sit tibi gobio tantum
 In locutis : quis enim te, deficiente crumena,
 Et crescente gulâ, manet exitus ; ære paterno,
 Ac rebus merſis in ventrem, scœnoris atque 40
 Argenti gravis, & pecorum agrorumque capacem ?

may stand also for all others of the like kind, in which self-knowledge is highly profitable to direct aright.

30. Senate.] If you wish to be a senator, you ought to know yourself, that you may be able to judge whether you are fit for such an office ; for nothing can be more pernicious to the state than unable statesmen, as well as disgraceful to those who are so.

— Therſites.] See Sat. viii. l. 269, note. Such a fellow as this could never think of contending for the armour of Achilles, or of making a third with Ulyſſes and Ajax in the dispute about it : he knew himself too well.

31. Exposed himself.] To ridicule—as the daw in the fable exposed itself to the derision of the other birds, when it had dressed itself in the borrowed plumes of the peacock. See Art. sw. Traduco, N° 5.

32. Doubtful.] As to his appearance, when he had the armour of Achilles on, no longer bearing his own semblance. Others give this passage another turn, and make it express the modesty of Ulyſſes, who shewed himself doubtful whether he should demand the armour or not, looking upon himself as unworthy to wear it. So FARNAB.

32—3. Great difficulty.] Where the controversy is very hazardous and difficult, and the cause requires an able advocate to defend it.

33. Consult thyself.] Before you undertake, consult well your abilities for it.

— Tell thyself, &c.] After much self-examination, let your own conscience answer, and tell you what manner of man you are.

34. A vehement orator.] Eloquent and powerful.

The sacred senate. For Theristes does not demand the 30
Breast-plate of Achilles, in which Ulysses exposed himself Doubtful. Or whether you may affect to defend a cause in Your abilities is to be known, and regarded in the greatest, 35

And in the least affairs ; even when a fish shall be bought :
Nor should you desire a mullet, when you have only a gudgeon
In your purse : for what end awaits thee, your purse failing,
Your gluttony increasing : your paternal fortune,
And substance, sunk in your belly, capable of containing 40
Interest, and principal, and fields and flocks ?

34. Or Curtius] Montanus, a man of very middling abilities.

— Or Matho.] See Sat. i. l. 32, and note ; vii. 129.—a fellow of no abilities, who, not succeeding at the bar, turned spy and informer.

35. Your abilities, &c.] Buccæ—lit. cheek, here (by synec.) put for the whole mouth, through which we speak ; and this, for speaking itself, by metonym. The poet means, that the extent of a man's capacity should be considered, if he intends to plead at the bar ; he should know his own powers of eloquence, and act accordingly.

35. Regarded.] This attention to the fitness of a man for what he undertakes should be regarded in all concerns whatsoever, from the highest to the lowest.

36. A fish, &c.] When he goes to the fish market, if his purse will only afford him a gudgeon, he should not think of buying so dear a fish as a mullet ; i. e. a man should always proportion his expences to his pocket.

38. What end, &c.] What must increasing expence and gluttony, and a decreasing and failing purse, end in ?

40. In your belly.] Your patrimony, both in goods and land, all spent to gratify your luxury and gluttony, all swallowed up by your voracious appetite.

— Capable of containing, &c.] Not only the interest and principal of what the father left in personal estate, but also all his land, and stock thereon, into the bargain.

By argentū gravis (joined with scenoris, which signifies interest upon money lent) the principal money itself may be understood. Or the epithet gravis may, here, signify the best silver money,

Talibus à dominis post cuncta novissimus exit money, in contradistinction to the tenue argentum, venæque secundæ, Sat. ix. 31.

Many interpret argenti gravis to denote silver in the rude heavy mass.

42. Such masters.] i. e. Owners, possessors.

— After all, &c.] When all else is spent and gone.

43. The ring.] The mark of honour and distinction worn by Roman knights. They must be driven very hard to part with this; but having, by their extravagance, reduced themselves below the fortune and rank of the equestrian order, they have no right to claim it, or to wear the badge of it.

— Pollio.] He was brought to that pass by his gluttony, that he was forced to sell his ring, and then beg for a livelihood.

— Naked finger.] His finger bare, bereft of the ring which he used to wear upon it.

44. Ashes, &c.] Death never comes too soon; the funeral pile, which reduces them to ashes, is never bitter to such as these, whose maxim is—"a short life and a merry one," or, "let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

45. To luxury.] To gluttons and spendthrifts.

— More to be feared, &c.] Because it can be attended with nothing but poverty and disease.

46. Ostimes the steps.] Plerumque—for the most part, most commonly, the degrees by which they proceed.

— Borrowed at Rome.] They first take up money at Rome.

47. Before the owners.] Spent before the face of the late owners—i. e. of the people who lent it.

From such masters, after all, last goes forth

47. When a little, &c.] Before it is all gone, and they have just enough to carry them off, whatever the sum may be I don't know—

48. The usurer.] Lit. the increaser of interest—the money-lender—who, perhaps, may have taken such an advantage of their necessities, as to make them pay interest upon interest—— Is pale.] With the fear of losing all his money.

49. Changed the soil.] Vertere solum, signifies to run one's country. Cic. pro domo. Those who have made off.

— Baia, and Ostia.] See Sat. iii. l. 4; and Sat. viii. 171, note 2. from whence they might take shipping, and make their escape into some other country.

50. For, to depart, &c.] To run away from Rome for debt is so common, that there is no more discredit in it, than changing the hot street of the Suburra (see Sat. iii. v.) for the cool air of the Esquillian hill. See Sat. v. l. 77—8. Foro is here put, by synec. for Rome itself. Or to depart from the forum, may imply their running away from justice.

53. Circensian games, &c.] These people have no other sorrow, or regret, at flying their country, than arises from their not being able to partake of the public diversions during their absence. See Sat. iii. l. 223, note.

54. Drop of blood, &c.] They have lost all shame—they cannot blush.

54—5. Detain modesty, &c.] The virtue of Modesty is laughed at and ridiculed: she is, as it were, taking her flight from from the city, and very few are for stopping her, or delaying her retreat.

56. This day, &c.] When you are to dine with me.

— Experience, &c.] i. e. You shall be convinced, by your own experience, whether I am an hypocrite, saying one thing and doing another; and while I have been laying down such fair and becoming rules of œconomy, in what I have been saying, I practise them not, in fact, neither with respect to my way of life, nor my moral conduct.—Re—in reality. Ter. And. Act v. Sc. i. l. 5.

58. Pulse.] Siliquas denotes bean or pea-pods, or the like; also the pulse contained therein—it stands for frugal and homely diet in general.

— Water-gruel.] Pultes.—Puls signifies a kind of diet which the ancients used, made of meal and water sodden together.—This also stands here for any thing of that homely kind.

59. Cakes.] These were dainties made with honey and other sweetmeats. Hor. Ep. Lib. i. x. l. 11, 12, says—

— Libra recuso,

Pane ego jam mellitis potiore placentis.

I nauseate honied cakes, and long for bread.

FRANCIS.

You shall see, says the poet, whether I am a glutton in secret, though professedly abstemious; whether I recommend a meal of herbs, yet secretly gormandize on dainties; and when before company I order my servant to bring some homely fare, I secretly whisper him to bring some very luscious and delicate food.

60. Promised guest.] Since you have promised to be my guest at dinner.

Modesty, ridiculous and flying out of the city. 55

60. You ſhall have.] i. e. You ſhall find in me—

61. Evander.] A king of Arcadia, who, having accidentally ſlain his father, ſailed into Italy, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the place where afterwards Rome was built. He entertained Hercules, and hoſpitably received Æneas when he landed in Italy. See Virg. Æn. viii. 154, & ſeq.

— Tirynthius.] A name of Hercules, the ſon of Jupiter and Alcmena—ſhe being born at Tiryns, a city of Peloponneſus, he was therefore called Tirynthius.

— A gueſt leſs, &c.] Meaning Æneas—inferior in birth.

62. Yet he akin, &c.] Æneas was the ſon of Anchifeſ and the goddeſs Venus.

63. By water.] Æneas was drowned in the Numicus, a river in Italy, which on that account was fabuloſly conſecrated.

— The other by flames.] Hercules burnt himſelf to death on Mount Oeta, in Theſſaly.

The poet ſeems to mean, that Perſicus, his friend, ſhould, on his coming to dine with him, find him another Evander with reſpect to the homelineſs and ſimplicity of his entertainment; and that Perſicus might conſider himſelf as Hercules, or Æneas, or indeed both, with regard to the welcome he would find, and the hoſpitable reception he would meet with.

64. Now hear, &c.] Now hear your bill of fare, not a ſingle article of which is furniſhed from the butcher's or poulterer's. Macellum ſignifies a market for all manner of proviſions.

65. Tiburtine farm.] Tibur, a pleaſant city of Italy, ſituate on the river Anio, about ſixteen miles from Rome—in the neighbourhood of this, Juvenal had a farm. See Hor. Ode. Lib. i. Ode vii. & al.

Nec metuenda tibi, siccatum frigore postquàm 75

Autumnum, & crudi posuere pericula succi.

Hæc olim nostri jam luxuriosa senatûs

Cœna fuit: Curius, parvo quæ legerat horto, Ipse focus brevibus ponebat oluscula: quæ nunc

66. Not knowing grass.] Never suffered to graze, but, like our house-lamb, fattened by suckling.

67. Nor yet daring.] Or attempting to browse on the twigs of the willow, which kids are very fond of, but they are apt to make the flesh bitter.

68—9. Mountain Asparagus.] Some wild sorts that grew on the mountains, inferior in flavour to the asparagus altilis, or that which was carefully cultivated in garden-beds. Asparagi, plur. may mean the young shoots of herbs that are to be eaten. See Sat. v. 81, note.

69. Bailiff's wife, &c.] The feminine of villicus, a steward or bailiff, signifies the wife of such a one, a farmer's wife, and the like. The asparagus gotten for the dinner was not of the sort which is raised at a great expence, and gathered by people kept for such purposes, but the wild sort, and gathered by a woman, who at other times was employed in spinning.

70. Eggs—warm, &c.] Large new-laid eggs, brought in the nest, which was made of hay twisted together.

71. Are added.] i. e. To the bill of fare.

— With the mothers, &c.] The same hens that laid them.

72. Grapes, &c.] Preserved for some time after their being gathered, so as to look quite fresh; as much so as when they were upon the vines.

73. The Signian.] Signia was a town in Italy, famous for pears and for rough wines—

Spumans immiti Signia musto. Sil. viii. 380.

73. The

Young kid, and more tender than all the flock, ignorant of grafs,

Nor yet daring to bite the twig of the low willow :
Which has more of milk than blood. And mountain Asparagus, which my bailiff's wife gather'd, laying her spindle aside.

Great eggs besides, warm in the twisted hay, 70
Are added, with the mothers themselves ; and, kept for a Part of the year, grapes, such as they were upon the vines :
The Signian and Syrian pear : from the same baskets
Apples, rivals to the Picene, and of a recent odour,
Nor to be feared by you, after they have laid aside 75
The autumn, dried by cold, and the dangers of a crude juice.
This, a long time ago, was the luxurious supper of the Senate : Curius put small herbs, which he had gather'd in his Little garden, over his small fire : which now

73. The Syrian pear.] These came from Tarentum, a city of Calabria, but were originally brought from Syria.

74. Apples, rivals to the Picene.] Horace says, that the apples from Tibur were not so good as the Picene.

Picenis cedunt pomis Tiburtia succo. Lib. ii. Sat. iv. 70.

Therefore it was a high commendation of his apples, to say they rivalled those of Picenum.

— Recent odour.] Smelling as fresh as if just gathered.

75. To be feared, &c.] You need not fear to eat them, since the cruder juices which they have in autumn are dried away, and now they are mellowed by the cold of winter, so that you are in no danger from the sour and unripened juice of them, as you might be if you ate them in autumn, soon after they were gathered.

By autumnum (succum understood) is here meant the autumnal juice of the apple, which is crude, and apt to offend the stomach. See autumnus -a -um. AINSW.

77. A long time ago.] Jam olim.—q. d. The senators of Rome would, in old times, not only have been content with such a supper as the above, but even have thought it luxury.

78. Curius] Dentatus. When the ambassadors of the Samnites came to him, they found him boiling some pot herbs over the fire. See Sat. ii. l. 153, note.

Squalidus in magnâ fastidit compede fossor, 80
 Qui meminit, calidæ sapiat quid vulva popinæ.
 Sicci terga fuis, rarâ pendentia crate,
 Moris erat quondam festis servate diebus,
 Et natalitium cognatis ponere lardum,
 Accedente novâ, si quam dabat hostia, carne. 85
 Cognatorum aliquis titulo ter Consulis, atque
 Castrorum imperiis, & Dictatoris honore
 Functus, ad hæc epulas solito maturiùs ibat, Erectum dormito referens à monte ligonem.

80. A dirty digger, &c.] Slaves who had committed certain crimes, were put in irons, and made to dig in mines, or in the fields, or in stone-quarries. See Sat. viii. 179, 180.

81. Who remembers, &c.] Who still retains the remembrance of his going into a cook's shop, and feasting on a sow's womb which was dressed there.

The paps of a sow with pig, together with a part of the belly, cut off from the animal, and dressed with proper seasoning, was a favourite dish among the Romans. Another favourite dish was the womb of a sow with pig. If this were taken from her while pregnant, it was called ejectitia: if after she had farrowed, porcaria; the former was reckoned the most delicious. See Hor. Lib. i. Epist. xv. l. 41. Pliny, Lib. viii. c. 51. says this was forbidden by the censors.

Such homely and frugal fare, as pleased that great man Curius, is now, such is the state of luxury among all ranks of people, condemned even by the lowest and most abject of slaves, who, in their better days, remember to have tasted fashionable dainties.

82. The back, &c.] What we call a flitch of bacon.

— Wide rack.] Crates signifies a grate, whatever it be made of—if of wood, we call it a rack, which consists of a frame, in which are inserted bars of wood at distances from each other, and used in keeping bacon. The word rarâ intimates, that the bars were few, and at large distances from each other.

83. For festival days.] High days and holidays, as we say—a great treat.

84. Bacon.] Lardum (quasi large aridum). Sometimes this signifies bacon, sometimes the lard or fat of bacon. Here, perhaps, what we call a rasher, i. e. a slice of fat bacon broiled.

— Birth-day present.] Natalitium signifies a gift, or present, sent so one on his birth-day, or an entertainment made for one's friends and relations on such an occasion.

A dirty digger, in a large fetter, despises,
Who remembers how the sow's womb of a cook's hot shop can relish.

The back of a dry swine, hanging on a wide rack,
It was the custom formerly to keep for feſtal days,
And to ſet bacon, as a birth-day preſent, before relations,
Freſh meat acceding, if the ſacrifice afforded any. 85
Some one of the kindred, with the title of thrice conſul, and Who the commands of camps, and the honour of dictator
Had diſcharged, went to theſe feaſts ſooner than uſual, Bringing back his erect ſpade from a ſubdued mountain.

85. Freſh meat acceding.] To this, perhaps, ſome new or freſh-killed meat was added.

— If the ſacrifice, &c.] If they offered a ſacrifice, and any fleſh of the victim remained to ſpare, it was reckoned and prized as an accidental rarity.

86. Some one of the kindred.] i. e. Of the perſon's kiſmen who made the feaſt.—Perhaps he alludes particularly here to Curius above mentioned, who was thrice conſul, and a great general: he beat Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, and drove him out of Italy; and was remarkable for his courage, honeſty, and frugality. See AINSW.

87. The honour of dictator.] This was a chief magiſtrate, choſen on ſome urgent occaſion, whoſe power was abſolute, from whom lay no appeal: his office was limited to ſix months, when there was a new election, either continuing the ſame, or chuſing a new one. The dictator differed in nothing from a king, but in his name, and in the duration of his power.

88. Went to theſe feaſts.] Homely as they were as to a ſumptuous treat.

— Sooner than uſual.] Leaving their work before the uſual hour.

89. His erect ſpade.] Raiſed high by being carried on his ſhoulder.

— Subdued mountain.] Where he had been at work, digging the ſoil, and ſubduing its ſtubbornneſs, rendering it fit for the purpoſes of agriculture.

Ovid, Met. xi. 31. uſes the word ſubigere in this ſenſe.

Boves preſſo ſubigebant vomere terram.

Virg. G. ii. l. 114. uſes the word domitum to denote the cultivation of land.

Aspice & extremis domitum cultoribus orbem.

Cùm tremerent autem Fabios, durumque Catonem, 90
 Et Scauros, & Fabricios, rigidique severos Cenforis mores etiam collega timeret :
 Nemo inter curas, & seria duxit habendum,
 Qualis in oceani fluctu testudo nataret,
 Clarum Trojugenis factura ac nobile fulcrum : 95
 Sed nudo latere, & parvis frons ærea lectis Vile coronati caput ostendebat aselli,
 Ad quod lascivi ludebant ruris alumni.
 Tales ergo cibi, qualis domus atque supellex.

90. Trembled, &c.] In old time, when the people stood in awe of great and good men.

— Fabii, &c.] These names stand here, not only as personally referring to the great men mentioned, but referring also to all the grave and virtuous magistrates of old time, who, like them, reprov'd and censur'd vice.

Fabius was the name of a noble family in Rome, many of which had borne great offices with the highest credit. They are often mentioned by our poet.

— Severe Cato.] Cato, called Censorius, is here meant, who was so called for his gravity and strictness in his censorship.

91. The Scauri.] See Sat. ii. l. 35, note.

— Fabricii.] The name of a family, of which was C. Fabricius Luscinus, a famous consul, who conquered Pyrrhus king of Epirus. One of this name was also censor. See Sat. ix. 142.

92. His colleague feared.] Alluding to Fabius Maximus, who found fault with his colleague, P. Decius, for being too remiss in his office of censor. See Sat. ii. l. 121, note 2.

93. Nobody, &c.] No one thought it worth their care, or a matter of serious concern.

94. What sort of tortoise, &c.] Whether small or great. But in the days of the poet, when luxury was risen to a great height, people of fashion were very anxious to inlay their furniture, and particularly the couches which they lay upon at their entertainments, with the largest and finest pieces of tortoise-shell, to get at which they spared no pains or expence. See Sat. vi. l. 380, and note.

95. Couch, &c.] Fulcrum literally signifies a stay or prop; but, by synec. is used for the couch or bed itself (see Sat. vi. l. 22.) which was inlaid and adorned in the most expensive and splendid manner.

95. The

But when they trembled at the Fabii, and severe Cato, 90
 And the Scauri, and Fabricii, and the severe manners
 Of a rigid censor, even his colleague feared ; Nobody esteemed it to be reckon'd among his cares, and serious concerns,

What sort of tortoise might swim in the waves of the sea,
 About to make a famous, and noble couch for the Trojugenæ : 95

But with a naked side, and on small beds, a brazen front
 Showed the vile head of an ass wearing a garland,
 At which the wanton boys of the country made a jest.
 Therefore such was their food, as was their house, and the furniture ;

95. The Trojugenæ.] The nobles, whom the poet here, and elsewhere, satirically calls Trojugenæ, because they boasted their descent from the antient Trojans, the first founders of the Roman empire after the siege of Troy. See Sat. i. l. 100, note.

96. Naked side.] Their couches had plain and ordinary sides, or sides which had no backs rising from them, to lean upon for their ease.

— Small beds.] They were frugal even in the size of their couches.

— A brazen front, &c.] Having no other ornament than a plain piece of brass in front, with an ass's head, crowned with a garland, fixed, or, perhaps, carved upon it. This, from a superstition which prevailed in Tuscany, that it operated as a charm to protect their lands from damage, and made them fruitful, used ordinarily to be hung up in their fields and gardens.

98. Which.] The ass's head, when hung out in the fields, &c.

— Boys of the country, &c.] Was laughed at by the rustic children, who made sport at its awkward appearance. It may be doubted, whether the ornament of the ass's head crowned with a garland, perhaps of vine leaves, and put, or carved, it may be, on the antient festal couches, had not some reference to Bacchus and his foster-father Silenus, the former of which was the supposed inventor of wine, and represented with a thyrsus, and garlands of vine leaves ; the other, as a drunken old man, riding upon an ass.

99. Such was their food, &c.] i. e. They were all of a piece, as we say.

Tunc rudis, & Graias mirari nescius artes, 100

 Magnorum artificum frangebat pocula miles,
 Ut phaleris gauderet equus, cælataque cassis

 Ac nudam effigiem clypeo fulgentis & hastâ, Pendentisque Dei, perituro ostenderet hosti.
 Argenti quod erat, solis fulgebat in armis.
 Ponebant igitur Thufco farrata catino
 Omnia tunc; quibus invidas, si lividulus sis, 110

100. Then rude.] The soldier in those days was rough and hardy, and unskilled in the refinements of luxury.

— Unknowning, &c.] The Romans copied their luxury from the Greeks, the imitation of whom was, among them, as fashionable as of the French among us. See Sat. iii. l. 60—1, where the poet speaks of this with the highest indignation.

101. Cities being overturned.] When besieged towns were taken and plundered.

— A found part, &c.] i. e. In some part of a heap of spoils which the soldier met with in his plundering the place.

102. Brake the cups, &c.] When the rude and unpolished soldier possessed himself of vessels, curiously embossed or engraved by the hands of some of the chief Grecian artists, so far from prizing them, he brake them to pieces, in order to adorn his horse, as with pompous trappings.

103. Embossed helmet.] The soldier having found some fine large pieces of plate, with the designs under mentioned wrought upon it, brake out the figures, and fastened them to his helmet, that he might exhibit them to the eyes of a vanquished enemy, whom he was going to put to the sword, as ensigns of triumph.

104. Likenesses, &c.] Of the wolf which suckled Romulus and Remus—of Romulus and Remus, and of the god Mars.

— Commanded to grow tame.] So as not only not to hurt the two children, but to nourish them with her milk.

105. Fate of the empire.] That destiny, which had appointed Romulus to be the founder of the city and commonwealth of Rome, ordered also the means of his preservation when an infant, by ordaining that a savage beast should grow tame.

— Under a rock.] The figures of the two brothers were described as lying under a rock, and sucking the she-wolf.

— Twin Quirini, &c.] Romulus and Remus are here understood, though the name of Quirinus was given to Romulus only,

Then rude, and unknowing to admire the Grecian arts, 190
Cities being overturned, in a found part of the spoils,

The soldier brake the cups of great artificers, only, after his consecration. The Roman people were also called Quirites. See Sat. iii. l. 60, note.

106. A naked image, &c.] The image of Mars, the father and founder of the Roman name.

107. Impending.] Pendentis—hanging, or hovering over the children as their protector, with his glittering shield and sword.

— Might shew, &c.] q. d. That the embossed helmet might exhibit to the foe about to die, the likenesses, &c.

108. What was of silver, &c.] All the silver gotten in war was only made use of to adorn their military accoutrements.

109. Food of corn.] Farrata signifies all sorts of food made of corn, and here stands for the coarse and homely food of the ancient Romans, before luxury got in among them.

109—10. Tuscan dish.] i. e. Earthen-ware, which was made at Aretum, a city of Tuscany; vessels made of it were called, therefore, vasa Aretina.

Aretina nimis ne spernas vasa monemus, Lautus erat Tuscis Porfena fictilibus.

MART. Lib. xiv. Ep. 98.

110. Would envy, &c.] Though the luxury of our present times has taught us to despise such things, yet if we had lived then, we should have been ready to envy their plain, but wholesome fare, and the happiness which our ancestors derived from their plain, frugal, and homely way of living.

Templorum quoque majestas præsentior, & vox

Grande ebūr, & magno sublimis pardus hiatu,

110. A little envious.] Lividulus.—q. d. If you had had a spark of envy in your disposition, it would have been excited.

111. The majesty, &c.] i. e. The majesty of the gods in the temples. Metonym.

— More present.] More propitious, more ready to help.

— A voice, &c.] Alluding to the story of M. Cæditius, a plebeian, who acquainted the tribunes, that as he was going along by the temple of Vesta, at midnight, he heard a voice, louder than human, say—"the Gauls are coming," and commanded him to tell the magistrates of this, that they might be warned of the danger.

113. Shore of the ocean.] i. e. From the sea-shore, after having made a descent upon Italy, under Brennus, who was the commander of the Galli Senones, they routed the Romans at the river Allia, marched to Rome, and took it; but they were afterwards defeated, and driven out of Italy by Camillus, who was called from exile, and made dictator.

114. Office of a prophet.] By thus warning the Romans of their approaching danger. This was particularly the business of augurs, soothsayers, &c.

— By these.] q. d. The voice gave warning of the enemy's approach, by these means (his) i. e. by the gods, who acted prophetically towards us.

115—16. Latian affairs.] The affairs of Italy, antiently called Latium.

116. Fistile.] Fistilis—earthen-ware.—In those days of plainness and simplicity, when the images of Jupiter, and of the other gods, were made of potters clay.

— Polluted by no gold.] i. e. Before he had fine statues, made

SAT. XL. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 89

The majesty of the temples was also more present, and a voice Almost in the midst of the night, and heard thro' the midst

gods,

Performing the office of a prophet, warned us by these.

This care Jupiter was wont to afford the Latian 115 Affairs, fictile, and polluted by no gold.

Those times home-born tables, and out of our own tree, those Times saw: the wood stood for these uses,

If haply the east-wind had thrown down an old nut-tree.

But now there is no pleasure of supping, to the rich 120

Seem to stink, and the roses; unless the wide orbs large

Ivory sustains, and a lofty leopard, with a great gape, made out of the gold which had been taken by rapine and plunder. Comp. Sat. iii. l. 20.

117. Those times.] Of antient simplicity.

— Home-made tables, &c.] Our ancestors did not send into foreign countries for materials to make tables, as it is now the fashion to do: they were content with the wood of their own trees.

118. Stood, &c.] Was reserved and applied to make such household furniture as was wanted.

119. Nut-trees.] All fruits that have an hard shell are called nucæ, such as almonds, walnuts, and the like. So the nucem, here, may signify any tree bearing such fruits—probably a walnut-tree is meant.

121. Venison.] Dama signifies a fallow deer, either buck or doe: here it denotes the flesh, which we call venison.

— The ointments.] Of perfume, with which they anointed their hair at their convivial meetings. See Hor. Ode xxix.
l. 3, 4, 5. Lib. iii.

122. Roses.] They made garlands and wreaths of roses and other flowers, which the guests wore on these occasions. See Hor. ubi supr. and see Ode the last, Lib. i.

123. Ivory sustains, &c.] Unless their tables, which were of a round form (orbes) were set on huge pedestals of ivory. The circumference meant by orbes, is here put for the tables themselves. Synec.

— A lofty leopard, &c.] The figure of a great leopard carved in ivory, put by way of pedestal to support the table.

Dentibus ex illis, quos mittit porta Syenes, Et Mauri celeres, & Mauro obscurior Indus, 125
 Et quos deposuit Nabathæo bellua saltu,

 Materia; quin ipsa manubria cultellorum
 Offea: non tamen his ulla unquam opsonia fiunt

123. A great gape.] His jaws represented as stretched wide open.

124. Those teeth.] Elephants teeth.

— The gate of Syene.] Porta is here put, as denoting Syene to be the door, or gate, as it were, through which, from the island, the passage lay into Ægypt, and thence to Rome. Syene was the metropolis of an island of that name; and this island was called Insula Elephantina, from the number of its elephants. It belonged to Ægypt, and bordered on Æthiopia. He uses the word porta here, as Horace uses janua, when speaking of the city of Cumæ, as to be passed in the way to Baiæ, Sat. iii. 4.

Janua Baiarum est.

125. Swift Moors.] The poet is describing the places from whence the elephants came. Many came from Mauritania, the inhabitants whereof were called Mauri, who were remarkable for their swiftness and activity.

— The Indian.] The largest elephants came from India.

— Darker, &c.] Of a blacker colour or complexion.

126. A beast has deposited, &c.] Bellua signifies any great beast—here, an elephant. These animals shed their teeth, which are often found.

— Nabathæan forest.] Some forest of Arabia, which was called Nabathæa, from נבית—Nebith, the first-born of Isaac, the supposed father of the Arabs.

127. Too much and too heavy, &c.] The teeth of elephants grow to an enormous size and weight, so as to be burthenome to the animal when grown old, till they drop out through age.

— Hence arises appetite, &c.] Orexis, from Gr. ὀρεῖν, appeto, cupio. The sight of this fine ivory is a sort of whet to their appetite (comp. l. 121—2.)—gives vigour to the stomach.

Out of those teeth, which the gate of Syene lends,
And the swift Moors, and the Indian darker than the Moors, 125

And which a beast has deposited in a Nabathæan forest,
Now too much and too heavy for his head: hence arise

Nor are my squares, nor a chess-man of this Material: nay the very handles of my knives
Are of bone: yet by these no victuals ever become

128. A silver foot, &c.] A table set upon a foot made of silver they would scorn, as much as to wear a ring made of iron, instead of gold, upon their finger. The Romans were very anxious to appear with fine rings, and were so luxurious as to have different sorts for summer and winter. See SAT. i. 28, 29. SAT. vii. 140—1.

129—30. Proud guest, &c.] Who can't sit down to a plain meal upon a plain table, but expects dainties set upon ivory.

130. Who compares, &c.] Who measures my fortune and expences by his own, and expects me to entertain him as he entertains others.

131. Little affairs.] My plain and frugal manner of living, according to the smallness of my fortune.

— Insomuch that, &c.] I am so much (aded), so totally, without a single ounce of ivory, that even the squares of my chess-board are without it, nor is one of the chess-men made of it.

Tessella is a small square stone, or piece of wood, with which they make chequer-work in tables, or boards. Here, probably, tessellæ means the chequers of a chess-board.

Calculus signifies a little pebble, or gravel-stone, with which they marked—hence calculi, chess-men, table-men. AINSW.

The game of chess is much more antient than the days of Juvenal; it is a common opinion that it was invented by Palamede, at the siege of Troy. See CHAMBERS, art. Chess.

134. Yet by these, &c.] Though the handles of my knives are

Rancidula; aut ideò pejor gallina secatur. 135
 Sed nec structor erit, cui cedere debeat omnis
 Pergula, discipulus Trypheri doctoris, apud quem

 Plebeios calices, & paucis assibus emptos 145
 Porriget incultus puer, atque à frigore tutus;

are made of bone, yet my victuals suffer no damage, but taste as well, and are carved as well, as if my knife-handles were made of ivory.

136. A carver.] It was, among other instances of luxury, a fashion to have an artist, who had been taught to carve dextrously, at their entertainments: he, as well as the sewer who set on the dishes, was called structor, from struo, to prepare, or make ready.

— School.] Pergula, here, signifies a place where the professors of any art, or science, taught their scholars publicly. I know not that we have an English word which exactly expresses it: in this sense of it—school, or academy, may come the nearest.

137. Doctor Trypherus.] He was eminent for his skill in carving, which he taught in a public school; hence Juvenal ludicrously calls him doctor.

138. A large fumen.] The udder of a sow, with the paps and part of the belly, cut from her the day after she has farrowed. See l. 81, note.

— Pygarg.] A sort of deer; perhaps a roe-buck.

139. Scythian birds.] It is thought that pheasants are meant here; but the description is too vague, to be certain what birds are precisely meant.

— Phœnicopter.] So called from Gr. φοινικας, crimson, and πτερον, a wing—a bird, having its wings of a crimson colour. The tongue of this bird was a great dainty among the Romans.

140. Gætulian goat.] Orix, a sort of wild goat, from Gætulia, a country of Africa.

— Blunt iron.] Some large knife, or some chopping instrument of iron, worn blunt with constant use.

Rank ; or is, therefore, a hen cut the worse. 135

Nor shall there be a carver, to whom every school ought To yield, a disciple of doctor Trypherus, at whose house
An hare with a large fumen, and a boar, and a pygarg,
And Scythian birds, and a huge Phœnicopter,
And a Gætulian goat, most delicious things, with a blunt

Are cut, and the feast made of elm sounds thro' all the Suburra.
Neither to take off a piece of a roe, nor the side of an African Bird, does my little novice know, and always rude,
And accustomed to the broken pieces of a little steak.
Plebeian cups, and bought for a few pence, 145
The homely boy, and safe from cold, shall reach forth.

141. Made of elm, &c.] Trypherus had all kind of provision for a feast made in wood, as the best material for the convenience of teaching ; the hacking and hewing of which, among the scholars, must have made no small noise.

— Thro' all the Suburra.] A very public street in Rome, often mentioned before. The idea of carving being erected into a science, and taught by a public professor, but exercising his pupils on wooden subjects, is truly ludicrous. See Sat. v. 121, note.

142. To take off, &c.] To carve according to art.

142—3. The side of an African bird.] The wing of a turkey. This bird came from Numidia, a country of Africa—hence called Gallus Numidicus.—To take off the wing (as we call the pinion, and part of the breast) of a roasted bird, without leaving some part behind, is reckoned to require some skill in carving.

143. My little novice.] Tyrunculus (dim. from tyro) signifies a young soldier, scholar, or a young beginner, in any science. Here it describes Juvenal's boy, as lately come out of the country, and beginning to learn his business.

— Always rude.] Untaught from his cradle to this hour.

144. Accustomed.] Used only perhaps to cut a piece off a collop, or steak, of some plain meat.

145. Plebeian cups.] Such as the common people use.

146. Homely boy, &c.] Incultus, here, perhaps, rather means meanly dressed, not trimmed up, not spruce ; and yet so clad as to keep him warm, to secure him from the cold—A frigore tutus.

— Reach forth.] Porriget, here, describes the act of the servant,

Non Phryx, aut Lycius, non à mangone petitus Quisquam eris, & magno : cùm poscis, posce Latine.
 Idem habitus cunctis, tonsa, rectique capilli,
 Atque hodie tantùm propter convivia pexi. 153
 Pastoris duri est hic filius, ille bubalci ;
 Suspirat longo non visam tempore matrem,
 Et casulam, & notos tristis desiderat hoëdos :
 Ingenui vultus puer, ingenuique pudoris,
 Quales esse decet, quos ardens purpura vestit. 153
 Nec pugillares docti in balnea rancus
 Testiculos, nec vellendas jam præbuit alas ;
 Crassa nec opposito pavidus tegit inguina gutto.
 Hic tibi vina dabit diffusa in montibus illis, servant, when he brings what is called for, and reaches or holds it forth to the guest, that he may take it. See Sat. i. l. 70 ; and Sat. v. l. 67.

147. Phrygian—Lycian, &c.] The nobility of Rome purchased elegant and handsome slaves, which were brought from Phrygia and Lycia, countries of Asia, by merchants who made it their business to traffic in slaves, and who, by using all arts to set them off to the best advantage, sold them at an extravagant price. These dealers were called Mangones, because they painted the slaves, to make them look the better, and sell the dearer ; from Gr. Μαγανος, a deceit by some contrivance, such as witchcraft. See AINSW. Or disguising a thing to make it look better than it is.

148. Ask in Latin.] For my poor boy understands no other language ; therefore, when you ask, or call, for what you want, do it in Latin, or he won't understand you.

149. The same habit, &c.] All my servants are dressed and appear alike.

~~xxx~~ Cröpp'd and straight.] Not long and curled, like the fashionable waiters at table.

150. Comb'd only, &c.] On this occasion, indeed, their hair is combed out, with a little more care than usual, that they may appear neat and decent. So Hor. Sat. viii. Lib. ii. l. 69, 70.

—Ut omnes

Præcincti rectè pueri, cômptique ministrant.

153. Little cottage.] Where he was born and brought up. Comp. Sat. ix. l. 60—1.

There shall not be Phrygian or Lycian, nor any bought from

A slave-merchant, and costly: when you ask, ask in Latin:
The same habit is to all, the hair cropp'd and straight,
And to-day comb'd only on account of our feast. 153

One is the son of an hardy shepherd, the other of an herds-man,

He sighs after his mother not seen for a long time;
And sad, longs for the little cottage, and the known kids.
A lad of an ingenuous countenance, and of ingenuous modesty,

Such as it becomes those to be, whom glowing purple clothes. 155

Nor, hoarse, does he expose himself,
With indecency, when naked in the baths,
Nor, fearful, practise means to hide his nakedness.
He shall give you wine made in those mountains

153. Known kids.] Which he used to tend and play with.

154. Ingenuous countenance, &c.] An honest countenance, and a genuine unaffected modesty.

155. Such as it becomes, &c.] q. d. It would be well if the same could be said of our young nobility.

— Glowing purple.] Alluding to the white robe, faced and trimmed with purple, which was worn by the young nobility till seventeen years of age. This was called prætexta, and those who wore it prætextati. It was worn also by magistrates, and other noble persons, as a mark or badge of honour. See Sat. i. l. 78, note; and Sat. ii. l. 170, note; and Sat. x. 99.

156. Nor, hoarse.] Alluding to the change of the voice in boys at the age of puberty.

157. In the baths.] Where youths exposed their naked persons, for purposes too horrid to explain.

159. Give you wine.] This modest boy of mine shall wait upon you at supper, and serve you

With wine from his own country brought; and made }
From the same vines, beneath whose fruitful shade, }
He and his wanton kids have often play'd.

162. A Gaditanian.] A Spaniſh girl from Gades, now Cadiz. See Sat. x. l. 1, note.

162—3. Tuneful company.] An uſual part of the entertainment, when great men feaſted, was to have wanton women dance and ſing in a laſcivious manner. This cuſtom was probably—

163. Approved.] i. e. Encouraged by the applauſe of the company.

164. Lower, &c.] By degrees, and at laſt ſeat themſelves on the ground.

165. The huſband lying by.] The huſband and wife are here ſuppoſed to be both invited to the entertainment, and both, from the couches on which they lay at meals, beholding theſe indecencies, which were ſo great as not even to be related, without ſhame (præſentibus ipſis) in their preſence.

Which brides do by their huſband's ſide behold,
 Tho' ſhameful before them to be but told.

HOLIDAY.

167. A provocative, &c.] To ſtir up the inſeebled paſſions.
 — Sharp incentives.] See urtica, uſed in a ſimilar ſenſe, Sat. ii., 128.

168. A rich man.] Who can afford the expence of ſuch ſcenes as theſe, and is profligate enough to uſe them as incentives to his palſed and depraved appetites.

169. The other ſex.] Women are moſt delighted with ſuch ſcenes

From whence himself comes, under the top of which he played : 160

For the country of my wine, and of my servant, are one and the same.

Perhaps you may expect, that, a Gaditanian, with a tuneful Company, may begin to wanton, and girls approved with applause

Lower themselves to the ground in a lascivious manner.

Married women behold this, their husband lying by, 165
Which it may shame any one to have related, they being present ;

A provocative of languishing desire, and sharp incentives
Of a rich man : yet that is a greater pleasure
Of the other sex, it is most affected by it, and soon
The eyes and ears are contaminated to a great degree. 170
An humble house does not contain these follies : let him hear
The noise of shells, with words, from which a naked slave Standing in a stinking brothel abstains ; let him enjoy Obscene expressions, and all the art of lewdness, scenes as these. Neither here, any more than throughout the Sixth Satire, does Juvenal conceal or spare the faults of the ladies of his time.

170. The eyes and ears.] The former, by beholding the lewd gestures ; the latter, by hearing the obscene songs of the dancing-women.

171. An humble house, &c.] A small estate is not capable of throwing away expence on such follies.

— Let him.] i. e. The rich and luxurious—so, ille fruatur,
l. 173.

172. The noise of shells.] These were, probably, shells jin-gled together in their hands as they danced, like the Spanish castanets.

— With words.] With obscene songs accompanying.

— From which, &c.] i. e. Which a common prostitute, standing naked in a brothel, would be ashamed to utter. The common harlots in the brothels were slaves, purchased for that purpose by the leno, or pander ; they were his property, and therefore Juvenal calls one of these mancipium, which signifies a thing or person bought and made over.

Qui Lacedæmonium pytismate lubricat orbem ; 175
 Namque ibi fortunæ veniam damus : alea turpis, Turpe & adulterium mediocribus : hæc tamen illi
 Omnia cùm faciant, hilares nitidique vocantur :
 Nostra dabunt alios hodiè convivia ludos :
 Conditor Iliados cantabitur, atque Maronis 180
 Altisoni dubiam facientia carmina palmam :
 Quid refert, tales versus quâ voce legantur ?
 Sed nunc dilatis averte negotia curis,

175. Who lubricates, &c.] Pytisma (from Gr. πυσις, spuô, to spit) signifies a spitting out of wine betwixt the teeth when we taste it, or a throwing out of the bottom of the cup on the floor.
 ANSW.

— The Lacedæmonian orb.] The Romans were very fond of fine pavements, or floors, made of marble, and inlaid with various kinds of it; among the rest, some came from Sparta, in small round forms, which were inserted in their proper places by way of ornament. When they had an entertainment, it was given in a room thus ornamented with a fine inlaid marble floor, on which the master of the house, and the guests, when they met at a feast, scrupled not to spit their wine, or throw out, as the custom was, the bottom of the cup.

This, among the numerous readings and comments which learned men have given of this much-controverted line, seems to be the best interpretation, because it nearly coincides with a passage in Horace to the same purpose—

Absumet hæres cæcuba dignior
 Servata centum clavibus ; & mero Tinget pavimento superbum Pontificum potiore cænis.

Lib. ii. Ode xiv. l. 25, &c.

Then shall the worthier heir discharge,
 And set th' imprison'd casks at large,
 And dye the floor with wine :
 So rich and precious not the feasts
 Of pontiffs cheers their ravish'd guests,
 With liquor more divine.

FRANCIS.

The various readings of this line 175, as well as the various senses given, may be seen by consulting the various commentators in the Leyden quarto edit. 1695. See also Hor. Delph. on the above ode.

The poet's meaning is, that such scenes of obscenity, and such arts of lewdness, are only fit to be enjoyed by professed sensualists.

176. There

Who lubricates the Lacedemonian orb with spirting wine: 175

For there we give allowance to fortune. The die is base, Adultery is base in middling people: yet when they do
All these things, they are called joyous and polite.

Our feast to-day will give us other sports:

The author of the Iliad shall be repeated, and of lofty Maro 180

The verses making a doubtful palm.

What does it signify with what voice such verses may be red?
But now leave off business, your cares deferr'd,

176. There we give, &c.] In the case of a rich libertine, we make all due allowance for his large fortune, and don't blame his excesses, as we do those of people in a lower class of life.

— The die is base, &c.] Gaming is reckoned very scandalous, adultery vile and abominable, in plebeians.

177. When they do, &c.] When people of quality, and of large fortunes practise these things, they are looked upon as instances of cheerfulness and elegance; in short, as gentleman-like qualifications.

179. Other sports.] Amusements of a different kind than those above mentioned.

180. Author of the Iliad, &c.] Homer—parts of his Iliad shall be repeated. Canto may perhaps imply, that the Romans red, or repeated verses, in a sort of chant or singing. See Sat. vii. 153, note.

— Lofty Maro.] Virgil.—He derived the surname of Maro from his father—he was the most sublime of all the Latin poets.

181. A doubtful palm.] The palm, or chaplet, made of palm-twigs and leaves, was a token of victory.

Juvenal means to say, that it was doubtful which of the two excelled, Homer or Virgil. See Sat. vi. 435—6.

182. With what voice, &c.] With what tone of voice—i. e. so intrinsically valuable and excellent are the verses of these authors, that they can't lose their value, though red or repeated by ever so indifferent a toned voice. This line also seems to imply, that verses were usually chanted or sung.

So Mr. CONGREVE—

It matters not with what ill tone they're sung,

Verse, so sublimely good, no voice can wrong.

183. Leave off business.] Lay it quite aside—think not of it.

Et gratam requiem dona tibi ; quando licebit
 Per totam cessare diem : non fœnoris ulla 185
 Mentio ; nec, primâ si luce egressâ reverti
 Nocte solet, tacito bilem tibi contrahat uxor,
 Humida suspectis referens multitia rugis,
 Vexataque comas, & vultum, auremque calentem,
 Protinus ante meum, quicquid dolet, exue limen : 190
 Pone domum & servos, & quicquid frangitur illis, Aut perit : INGRATOS ANTE OMNIA PONE SODALES.
 Intereâ Megalefiacæ spectacula mappæ

 Perda caballorum Prætor sedet : ac (mihi pace 195

183. Cares deferr'd.] All cares put off for the present.

185. Idle, &c.] Having nothing else to do, but to enjoy yourself all the day long at my house.

— Interest-money.] No talk of money matters.

186. Nor, if, &c.] Though, like many other husbands, you suffer from the irregularities of your wife.

187. Provoke you, &c.] Don't let the thoughts of this vex you, or let her make you angry, or tempt you to say a single word upon the subject, though, as the two next lines import, you should have found the most evident and undeniable circumstances of her guilt.—Contrahat bilem tibi—lit. contract, or draw together, choler to you.

188. Fine garments.] Multitia, or multicia—garments wrought so fine that the body might be seen through them. See Sat. ii. l. 66.

190. Put off, &c.] Exue—a metaphorical expression taken from putting off clothes, &c. Divest yourself of all uneasiness at entering my doors.

191. Lay aside, &c.] Pono also signifies to put off as clothes. He desires his friend to lay aside, or put off, all his domestic uneasinesses, arising from the mischief or misconduct of servants.

192. Ungrateful friends.] Which are the bitterest trials of all.

193. Meantime.] This invitation of the poet to his friend was on a holiday, or day of the public games beginning.

— Spectacles.] The shews or games.

— Megalefian towel.] At the Circensian and Megalefian games, they hang out a towel (mappa) to shew that the sports were going to begin.—Nero introduced this custom ; for bearing,

And give yourself grateful rest, since you may Be idle throughout the whole day: of interest-money 185
 No mention; nor, if gone forth at day-break, she is wont
 To be returned at night, let your wife provoke you, silent, to anger,

Bringing back her fine garments with suspected wrinkles,
 Her hair disorder'd, and her countenance and ears glowing.
 Immediately put off before my threshold whatever grieves:
 Lay aside home, and servants, and whatever is broken by them, 191

Or is lost: BEFORE ALL—PUT AWAY UNGRATEFUL FRIENDS.

Meantime, the spectacles of the Megaleſian towel
 Grace the Idæan solemnity, and, like as in triumph, The prætor, a destroyer of horses, sits: and (if with the

ing, as he sat at dinner, how impatiently the people expected his coming, he threw out at the window the towel with which he wiped his hands, to give the people notice that he had dined, and would soon be at the circus. Ever since this, the beginning of these games was announced by hanging out a towel.

The Megaleſian games were in honour of Cybele, the mother of the gods. She was called μειγάλη Μήτηρ, magna Mater, and from thence these games Megaleſia, or Ludi Megalenſes; they began on the fourth of April, and lasted six days.

194. Idæan solemnity.] Cybele was called Idæa, from Ida, a mountain of Phrygia, where she was worshipped; and hence her festival was called Idæum Solenne.

195. The prætor, a destroyer, &c.] He was an officer not unlike our mayor or sheriff. Sat. i. 101, note.—He was to oversee these sports, and sat in great state, while they were acting, to the destruction of many horses, which were spoiled on the occasion. See Sat. x. l. 36—40.

Many are for reading prædo, and suppose it to denote the prætor's acting sometimes unjustly, and determining the prizes wrongfully, taking them from the winning horses, and giving them to the losers, by which he might be said to rob the winners of their due.

Others think the word prædo is used, as a jest upon the prætor's

Et gratam requiem dona tibi ; quas

 Sat. iii. l. 65, and note.

 contracted into wrinkles.

 the delightful spring. This was in the beginning of April.
 See above, note on l. 193, ad fin.

204. Avoid the gown.] The gown was the common habit of the Romans, inasmuch that Virg. Æn. i. 286, calls them gen-tem togatam. The poet, by togam, here, means the people that wore it, by metonym. i. e. the Romans now crowding to the games—let us keep out of their way, that we may enjoy ourselves in quiet.

204—5. Safe countenance, &c.] Without fear of being put out of countenance. The Romans used to follow their business till noon, that is, the sixth hour, our twelve o'clock ; and then to the ninth hour, our three o'clock in the afternoon, they exercised and bathed themselves, and then went to their meals : but to do these sooner than the appointed hours was allowed only on festival days, or to persons aged and infirm : otherwise, to be seen going to the baths before the usual appointed hour was reckoned scandalous. See Sat. i. l. 49, and note.

206. You could not, &c.] i. e. Frequent feasts, and indulge in idleness ;—however these may be occasionally pleasant, a continuance of them for a week together would grow irksome.

tor's fine trappings and gawdy dress on the occasion, as if he had robbed the horses of their finery to put upon himself.

There are other conceits upon this subject, but perda seems to give the most natural sense of the passage. I am, therefore, with Salmassius and others, for adopting it.

195. If with the peace, &c.] If with their good leave I may take the liberty of saying so much without offence.—The poet here lashes the Roman people for their great eagerness to crowd after these shews, as if they thought nothing else worthy their attention. Sat. x. l. 80—1.

197. The circus.] Where those games were celebrated.

— A noise strikes, &c.] I hear a great shout, as of victory, which makes me suppose that the race is determined on the behalf of some favourite competitor.

198. The green cloth.] The four parties, which ran chariot-races in the circus, were divided in several liveries, viz. green, russet, blue, and white. One of these factions was always favoured by the court, and, at this time, most probably, the green; which makes Juvenal fancy that he hears the shouts for joy, that their party had won the race.

199. Should fail.] If the green cloth should fail of the prize, or if the festival, which occasioned the celebration of these games, should be laid aside, and these shews fail, or cease.

200. This city.] The people of Rome would be ready to break their hearts—reflecting on their immoderate fondness for these shews.

— The consuls.] Paulus Æmilius and Terentius Varro.

201. Cannæ.] A small town, near which Hannibal obtained a great victory over the Romans. See Sat. x. l. 164, note.

Line 1. This day.] On which I am going to offer sacrifices, on account of my friend Catullus, the merchant's, escape from the dangers of the sea.

— Corvinus.] Juvenal's friend, to whom this Satire is addressed.

— Birth-day.] Which was a day of great festivity among the Romans; they celebrated it yearly, offering thanksgiving-offerings to the gods, and made feasts, to which they invited their friends, who made them presents on the occasion. See Sat. xi. l. 84, note. See Hor. Ode xi. Lib. iv. l. 1—20. Virg. Ecl. iii. l. 76.

2. Festal turf.] The altar of green turf, which our poet had built on the occasion, thus suiting his devotion to his circumstances. Comp. Hor. Lib. iii. Od. viii. l. 2—4.

— The animals promised.] i. e. To be offered in sacrifice to the gods.

3. Queen.] Juno, the queen of the gods. See Æn. i. l. 50. The fabled wife of Jupiter, the supreme deity of the Romans.

— A snowy lamb.] They offered white animals to the superior gods, black to the inferior. See Hor. Lib. i. Sat. viii. l. 27; and Virgil, Æn. iv. l. 61.

4. Equal fleece.] A like fleece—i. e. a white one; or fleece, here, may, by synec. be put for the whole animal offered—a like offering.

an opportunity to lash the Haridepetæ, or Legacy-hunters, who flattered, and paid their court to rich men, in hopes of becoming their heirs.

THIS day, Corvinus, is sweeter to me than my birthday,

In which the festal turf expects the animals promised

To the gods : we kill to the queen a snowy lamb :

An equal fleece shall be given to Minerva.

But the petulant victim shakes his long extended rope, 5

Kept for Tarpeian Jove, and brandishes his forehead :

4. Minerva.] Lit. the fighter with the Moorish gorgon.—The gorgons were supposed to be three, who inhabited near Mount Atlas, in Mauritania. Medusa is said to have been beloved by Neptune, who lay with her in the temple of Minerva, at which the goddess, being angry, changed the hair of Medusa into serpents, and so ordered it, that whoever beheld her should be turned into stone. She was killed by Perseus, the son of Jupiter and Danaë (with the help of Minerva) as she lay asleep, who cut off her head : this was afterwards placed in the ægis, or shield, of Minerva.

Hyginus says, that Medusa was not slain by Perseus, but by Minerva. Britannic. in loc.

Sometimes the head of Medusa was supposed to be worn in the breast-plate of Minerva. See Æn. viii. l. 435—8.

5. Petulant victim, &c.] The wantonness and friskiness of the calf leading along in a rope, is here very naturally described.

6. Tarpeian Jove.] On the Mons Capitolinus, otherwise called the Tarpeian Hill, from the vestal virgin Tarpeia, who betrayed it to the Sabines, Jupiter had a temple, whence his titles—Tarpeian and Capitoline.

7. Ripe,

Quippe ferox vitulus, templis maturus & aræ,

 Nam præter pelagi casus, & fulguris ictum

7. Ripe, &c.] The beasts were reckoned of a proper age and size for sacrifice, when the tail reached the hough, or joint, in the hinder leg.

8. Sprinkled, &c.] They used to pour wine on the heads of the sacrifices, between the horns. So Virg. Æn. iv. l. 60—1,

Ipsa tenens dextrâ pateram pulcherrima Dido, Candentis vaccæ media inter cornua fundit,

Hence the Greek epigram on the vine and the goat.

Κῆν με φαγῆς ἐπὶ ρίζαν ὅμως· ἴλι καρποφορήσω Ὅσσοις ἱπποκρίσαι σοι, Τραγῆ, θυομένων. ANTHOL. Ep. i.

“ Though thou eatest me down to the very root, yet I shall “ bear fruit,

“ Sufficient to pour on thee, O goat, when thou art sacri-

9. Teazes, &c.] It is usual for the young of all horned animals to butt against trees, as if practising for future fight—sometimes we see them in sport engaging one another.

10. If my fortune, &c.] The poet, throughout the above account of his sacrifices, as well as of the altar on which they were to be offered, shews his prudence and frugality, as well as his friendship for his preserved friend Catullus. He professes to shew his affection, not as he would, but as his fortune could afford it. Instead, therefore, of a white bull to Jupiter, and white cows to Juno and Minerva, he offers a white ewe-lamb to Juno, the same to Minerva, and a calf to Jupiter.

11. A bull.] The usual sacrifice to Jupiter was a white bull.

For it is a stout calf, ripe for the temples and altar,
And to be sprinkled with wine ; which is now ashamed to draw

Its mother's dugs, and teazes the oaks with its budding horn.
If my fortune had been ample, and like my affection, 10
A bull, fatter than Hispulla, should be drawn, and, with its very

Bulk flow, nor nourish'd in a neighbouring pasture,
But his blood shewing the glad pastures of Clitumnus,
Should go, and his neck to be stricken by a great minister,
On account of the return of my yet trembling friend, lately having 15

Suffer'd dreadful things, and wondering that he is safe.
For, beside the hazard of the sea, and the stroke of lightning

11. Fatter than Hispulla.] A fat, sensual lady, noted as infamous for keeping a player. Sat. vi. l. 74.

— Drawn.] Dragged by ropes, fixed to the horns, to the altar.

11—12. With its very bulk flow.] So fat that he could hardly stir.

12. In a neighbouring pasture.] Not bred or fatted in the neighbourhood of Rome.

13. His blood shewing, &c.] By the colour and richness, as well as quantity of it.

— Clitumnus.] A river dividing Tuscany and Umbria, whose water, says Pliny, makes the cows, that drink of it, bring white calves :—whence the Romans, as Virgil and Claudian observe, were plentifully furnished with white sacrifices for Jupiter Capitolinus. See Virg. Geor. Lib. ii. 146—8.

14. A great minister.] Some interpret this, as referring to the quality of the person giving the blow, as if it were to be the chief pontiff, or sacrificer, and not one of his popæ, or inferior officers. Others think, that it refers to the size and strength of the person officiating, able to perform his office at one blow.

15. Yet trembling friend, &c.] This is a very natural circumstance, that a man, for some time after a narrow escape from an horrible danger, should shudder at the very thoughts of it, and stand amazed at his deliverance.

17. The hazard of the sea.] i. e. The danger of the waves.

17—18. Lightning escaped.] By which he might have been killed in an instant, but happily escaped the blow.

18. Thick

18. Thick darkness, &c.] So that they could take no observation, nor know where they were, or which way to steer. Such a circumstance is awfully related, Acts xxvii. 20.

19. A sudden fire, &c.] A flash of lightning struck the sail-yards, and set the sails on fire.

20. Might believe, &c.] Each person on board might think it levelled at him, it was so near him.

21. Astonished, might think, &c.] For in case of a shipwreck, some might escape on parts of the broken ship (comp. Acts xxvii. ult.) ; but if the ship were burnt, all must be consumed together : therefore, horrible as a shipwreck might be in the expectation, there could be no comparison, in point of horror, between this and a ship on fire.

22. All things become, &c.] The above circumstances of the danger from the waves, and of the greater horror of the ship's being struck with lightning, and the rigging set on fire, are ingredients in a poetical description of a tempest ; even the imagination of the poet could not invent any thing more dreadful and grievous.

24. Another kind of danger.] i. e. Which Catullus was in. This, as afterwards appears, was from the ship's being half full of water (l. 30.) and he forced to lose his property to save his life.

25. The rest, &c.] Of my friend's disasters, which I shall relate, &c. of the same unfortunate nature.

26. Known

Escaped, thick darkness hid the sky
 In one cloud, and a sudden fire struck the sail-yards;
 When every one might believe himself struck with it, and presently, 20
 Astonish'd, might think that no shipwreck could be Compared with the burning sails. All things become Such, as grievously, if at any time a poetic tempest Arises. Behold another kind of danger, hear,
 And again pity, tho' the rest be of the same 25 Kind: a dire portion indeed, but known to many,
 And which many temples testify with a votive
 Tablet—who knows not that painters are fed by Isis?
 The like fortune also happen'd to my Catullus;
 When the middle hold was full of water, and now 30
 The waves overturning the alternate side of the ship
 Of uncertain wood, the prudence of the grey master
 Could confer no help: he began to compound

26. Known to many.] Who have been in a like situation.

27. Many temples, &c.] Persons that escaped shipwreck used to have a painting made of the scene which they had gone through, drawn upon a tablet, which they vowed to Neptune during their distress, and hung up in some temple near the sea-coast.

This was called votiva tabella. To this Horace alludes, Lib. i. Ode v. ad fin. which see, and the note, Delph. edit.

28. Fed by Isis?] The Romans made so many vows to the Ægyptian goddess Isis, whom the merchants and seamen looked on as their patroness, that many painters got their bread by drawing the votivæ tabulæ, which were hung up in her temples, so great was the number of them.

30. Middle hold, &c.] i. e. The hold was half full, or full up to the middle.

31. Alternate side, &c.] Heeling her from side to side, by dashing against them alternately.

32. Uncertain wood.] It being now doubtful, whether the timbers could much longer stand the force of the beating waves upon her sides, or whether she would not go to pieces.

— The prudence, &c.] All the skill and care of the old experienced master of the ship could afford no help.

33. He.] i. e. Catullus.

33. Began to compound, &c.] To bargain (as it were) for his life at the expence of his goods, by throwing them overboard. See AINSW. Decido, N^o 4.

34. Imitating the beaver, &c.] This notion of the beaver is very antient, and well introduced by our poet: but it is to be reckoned among those vulgar errors which have no foundation in truth.

In the first place, the liquid matter, which is called in medicine castoreum, is not found in the testicles, but inclosed in bags, or purses, near the anus of the animal.

In the next place, such an instance of violence upon itself was never known to be committed by the beaver.

See CHAMBERS.—AND BROWN'S Vulg. Err. book iii. c. iv.

38. To throw over.] Into the sea.

— The most beautiful things.] His finest and most valuable merchandize. See Job ii. 4.

39. Tender Mæcenases.] Mæcenæ, the favourite of Augustus, was a very delicate and effeminate person, from whom people of such character were denominated Mæcenæ. See Sat. i. l. 66, note. Such persons were very finical and expensive in their dress, and therefore poor Catullus lost a good market for his purple dress, by throwing it overboard in the storm.

40. The very sheep, &c.] In this place the poet means, that the wool, of which these other garments were made, had a native tinge of a beautiful colour, owing to the particular nature of the soil, and water, and air, where the sheep were bred, so that the garments were made up without receiving any artificial dye.

41. A remarkable fount, &c.] The water of which, as well as the

Of his testicles: thus medicated does he understand his groin.

Made by Parthenius, a cup holding an urn,

And worthy Pholus thirsting, or the wife of Fuscus. 45

Add also baskets, and a thousand dishes, a great deal the pasture where the sheep fed, was supposed to contribute to the fineness and colour of their wool.

42. Bætic air.] The air of Bætica, now Andalusia, in Spain, through which ran the river Bætis, is here assigned its share in the improvement of the wool.

43. Dishes.] Lanx signifies a great broad plate, or deep dish, to serve up meat in, which the Romans had carved and imbossed at a great expence.

44. Parthenius.] Some curious artist, whose works were in high estimation.

— An urn.] A measure of liquids containing four gallons.

45. Pholus.] A drunken Centaur, who, when he entertained Hercules, produced a tun of wine at once.

— Wife of Fuscus.] Fuscus was a judge, noted by Martial for drunkenness, as his wife is here, in the good company of Pholus the drunken Centaur.

46. Baskets.] The bascaudæ were a kind of baskets which the Romans had from the ancient Britons. Vox Britannica.

vessels of all shapes and sizes, in which meat was served up to table; also plates on which it was eaten.

47. Wrought-work.] Cælati, from cælo, to chase, imboss, or engrave.—This wrought-work here mentioned, is thought, from what follows, to have been the large wrought, i. e. chased or imbossed, gold cup, that Philip, king of Macedon, used to drink out of, and to put under his pillow every night when he went to sleep. This must have been a very great, as well as valuable curiosity.

But as it is said multum cælati, one should rather think, that the poet means a great quantity of wrought plate, which had once been the property of Philip; a set of plate, as we should say. Philip was killed by Pausanias three hundred and thirty-six years before Christ.—Juvenal flourished about the latter end of the first century: so that this plate was very old.

—Buyer of Olynthus.] This cup, and other pieces of valuable plate, he gave to Lathenes, governor of Olynthus, a city of Thrace, to betray it into his hands. It was, from this, said of Philip, that what he could not conquer by iron (i. e. his arms) he gained by gold.

48. But who now, &c.] This implied commendation of Catullus seems here to be introduced by the poet, in order to lash the prevailing vice of covetousness, which was so great, as to make men love money beyond even life itself. It is said of Aristippus the philosopher, that, being on board a ship with pirates, he threw all his money overboard secretly, lest, finding it, they should throw him into the sea, in order to possess what he had.

50. On account of life, &c.] i. e. That they may spend them in the necessaries and comforts of life.

51. Blind, &c.] With the vice of avarice.

—Live for the sake, &c.] They do not get money that they may live (see note, l. 50.) but only live for the sake of money.

52. The

Of wrought-work, in which the cunning buyer of Olynthus had drunk.

But who now is the other, in what part of the world, who dares Prefer his life to his plate, his safety to his goods?

Some do not make fortunes on account of life, 50

But, blind with vice, live for the sake of fortunes.

The greatest part of useful goods is thrown over; but Neither do the losses lighten. Then, the contrary (winds) urging,

It came to that pass, that he should lower the mast with an axe,

And free himself distressed: the last state of danger is, 55

When we apply helps to make the ship less.

Go now and commit your life to the winds, trusting to

52. Useful goods, &c.] Not only articles of superfluity, such as fine imbossed plate, and the like, but even useful necessities, such as clothes, provisions, and, perhaps, a great part of the tackling of the ship, were thrown overboard on this occasion.

53. Losses lighten.] Alleviate their danger; or, what they had lost by throwing overboard did not seem to lighten the ship, as she kept filling with water. See l. 30.

54. It came to that pass.] Illud recidit.—Some read decidit, which has the same meaning here. Il en vint là. Pr.

—He.] Catullus, who was probably the owner of the ship.

—Should lower, &c.] i. e. Should cut away the mast, as we term it. Angustum, l. 55, has the sense of angustatum.

56. Apply helps, &c.] It is a sign of the utmost distress, when we are obliged to use helps to make the ship lighter, which is supposed to be the meaning of minorem in this place. Afferimus præsidia seems to have the same sense as βοηθήας ἐκφέρειν, Acts xxvii. 17.

57. Go now, &c.] In this apostrophe the poet severely reproves those, who, for the sake of gain, are continually risking such dangers as have been described. Comp. Hor. Lib. i. Ode iii. l. 9—24.

—Trusting, &c.] The timber, of which the sides of the ships were made, were hewn in a rough manner into planks of four or seven fingers breadth in thickness; so that the passengers,

Confusus ligno, digitis à morte remotus

gers, having no more between them and the water, might be said to be no farther removed from death. Alluding to a saying of Anacharsis the philosopher, who, on hearing one say that a ship was three fingers thick, answered, "then just so far from death are those who sail in her."

59. If the pine.] Teda signifies the middle or heart of the pine-tree. AINSW. Of this, it seems, they made the sides of their ships, after cutting or hewing it into planks. See note on l. 57. These were, at the thickest, seven fingers breadth, or thickness, measuring from one edge to the other on the same side. Teda, here, means the plank, by synec.

60. Provision-baskets.] Reticulis—twig baskets made like a net to carry provisions in; or bags made of network, used for that purpose by sailors, soldiers, and travellers, something like our knapsacks as to their purpose.

— Belly of a flagon.] Lagenæ—a flagon, or bottle with a large belly, to keep wine in—q. d. a great-bellied flagon.

61. Axes to be used, &c.] To cut away the mast upon occasion. See l. 54. These may happen to be as necessary as your other sea-stores; therefore, in the next place (mox) provide axes. Aspice—vide & memento. Marshall. To be used, sumendas—lit. to be taken.

62. But after, &c.] The narrative of Catullus's adventure is here resumed.

— Lay smooth.] Became calm, on the storm ceasing.

— Circumstances, &c.] When the happy fortune of my friend prevailed (see AINSW. Tempus, N° 2.) and things put on a more prosperous appearance.

62—3. The mariner.] Vector signifies a bearer, or carrier; also a passenger in a ship; likewise a mariner. See AINSW.

63. Fate

A hewn plank, removed from death four Fingers, or seven, if the pine be very large.
 Immediately with your provision-baskets, and bread, and Remember axes to be used in a storm.

 Are spinsters, nor, much stronger than a moderate air
 Is there a wind, the miserable prow ran with a poor device,
 With extended garments, and, which alone was left,
 With its own sail: the south winds now failing,

63. Fate more powerful, &c.] The Romans believed every thing to be governed by fate, even the gods themselves.

64. The chearful destinies, &c.] The parcæ, or fates. See Sat. x. 252, note. Pensa—tasks enjoined to people that spin; also thread, &c. spun. Ducere pensa, to spin. Ainsw. See Hor. Lib. iii. Ode xxvii. l. 63.

65. White thread.] It was the opinion of the antients, that when the destinies intended long life to a person, they spun white thread; when death, black thread.

The phrase of ducere pensa, to spin, taken notice of in the last note, alludes to the action of the spinster, who draws the wool, or flax, from the distaff as she spins it; this she continues, till the task (pensum) assigned her, is finished.

66. Spinsters.] And are now become spinsters, &c.

67. The miserable, &c.] The shattered vessel left in a miserable plight. Prora (by synec.) may mean the vessel itself: but it literally signifies the fore part, the fore deck or fore-castle of a ship; and so it is probably to be understood here, as the velo suo implies the sail proper to this part of the ship—the fore-sprit sail, as we call it. This was the only remaining sail.

— Poor device.] She made a sad shift to make her way through the water, by the poor contrivance of the seamen's clothes spread out—vestibus extensis—to help her on.

68. Was left.] i. e. Had surmounted the violence of the storm. Superaverat, quasi supererat—remained; as in Virg. Æn. v. 519—

Amisâ solus palmâ superabat Acestes.

the coasts of Italy. See Hor. Sat. i. l. 6; and Lib. iii. Ode iii. l. 4, 5. Ode iii. Lib. i. l. 14—16. These now began to abate.

70. Return'd with the sun.] With the day-light.

— Acceptable to Iulus, &c.] The Alban Mount, on which Iulus Ascanius, the son of Æneas, built Alba longa. This is the sublime top, mentioned l. 72.

The poet calls it gratus Iūlo, because he left Lavinum, built by Æneas, to live at Alba.

71. Lavinum of his step-mother, &c.] When Iulus came to live at Alba, he left Lavinum to his mother-in-law Lavinia, the second wife of Æneas (who had named the city Lavinum, after his wife Lavinia.) Hence Juvenal says, novercali Lavino.

72—3. A white sow, &c.] From which the city was called Alba—white. See Sat. vi. l. 176, note.

73. A wonderful udder, &c.] Sumen—the belly, paps, or udder of a sow. ANSW.—Here, by synec. it is to be understood to signify the sow. This was a sight much admired by the joyful Trojans, who, after all their dangers and toils, discovered, by this, their promised resting-place.

Æn. Lib. viii. l. 46—

Hic locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum.

Troy was the capital of Phrygia, a country of Lesser Asia, and sometimes taken for the whole country of Phrygia: hence the Trojans were called Phrygians.

74. Thirty dugs.] With each a pig sucking at it. Æn. viii. l. 45.—A sight never seen before.

75. She enters.] i. e. The ship enters.

— Placed moles.] The moles, or piers, which had been placed,

The hope of life return'd with the sun : then, acceptable to Iulus, 70

And an abode preferr'd to the Lavinum of his step-mother,
The sublime top is beheld, to which the name a white Sow gave (a wonderful udder to the glad Phrygians)
And famous for thirty dugs never [before] seen.

At length she enters the placed moles, thro' the included waters, 75

And the Tyrrhene Pharos, and again the stretched out arms
Which meet the middle sea, and far leave

Italy : therefore you will not so admire the havens
Which nature has given : but the master, with mangled ship, Seeks the interior pools of the safe bay, pervious to 80
A Baian boat : there, with a shaved head, secure, placed, or built, to keep off the violence of the sea, and to form a safe and quiet harbour.

75. Included waters.] The waters included between and within the moles.

76. Tyrrhene Pharos.] In this haven of Ostia, on the shore of the Tyrrhene Sea, Claudius built a Pharos, or light-house, in imitation of that at Alexandria in Ægypt.

— And again.] We once more return to the spot from whence we set out.

— Stretched-out arms, &c.] The two sides of the piers, or artificial mounts, like two arms, stretched so far into the Tyr-rhene Sea, that they seemed to inclose it as far as the middle way, and, as it were, to leave the coast of Italy behind.

78. You will not, &c.] This port, formed in this manner by art, is much more wonderful than any port naturally formed by the shore itself ; therefore the former is more to be admired than the latter.

80. The interior pools, &c.] The innermost part of this artificial haven, as the most secured from the sea.

81. A Baian boat.] Little wherries were used at Baia to carry people in still water ; perhaps from one side of the bay to the other.

— Shaved head, &c.] It was a custom, when in distress at sea, to invoke the aid of some god or other (see Jonah i. 5.) with a solemn vow of cutting off their hair, and offering it as an acknowledgment for their preservation. See Acts xxvii.
34. where Paul says, “ there shall not an hair of your head pe-

Garrula securi narrare pericula nautæ.

Ac molles ornate focos, glebamque virentem.

said, "they should not need to shave and devote their hair, for "they should be preserved without it." See POWER's note.

82. The sailors rejoice, &c.] Take a delight to chatter and prate about what had happened to every body they met. The poet says, garrula pericula—quia nautas garrulos reddebant—i. e. because they set the sailors a prating. BRIT. See a like figure of speech, Sat. vii. 49. Hypallage.—q. d. The chattering sailors delight to relate their dangers.

83. Boys.] Go, my boys—speaking to his servants. See Sat. xi. l. 151, where he describes his two servant-lads.

—Favouring, &c.] Helping on the solemnity, by observing a profound silence and attention; this was always commanded during a sacrifice, that there might be no disturbance or interruption. In this view, faveo means to attend with silence. AINSW. So Hor. Lib. iii. Ode i. l. 2. Favete linguis, which SMART translates, Give a religious attention; and which is thus commented on in Delph. edit.—Favete linguis. "Vox in "sacris olim usitata, quâ silentium imperabatur." "An expression formerly used at sacrifices, or sacred rites, by which "silence was commanded."

Go then, my boys, the sacred rites prepare,
With awful silence, and attention hear. POWER.

See Virg. Æn. v. l. 71. Ore favete omnes, &c.

84. Put garlands, &c.] On solemn occasions all the temples of the gods were adorned with garlands.

So Virg. Æn. ii. l. 248—9.

Nos delubra Deûm

——— festâ velamus fronde per urbem.

—Meal on the knives.] The custom was to make cakes with meal and salt, with which they sprinkled the sacrificing knife, the head of the victim, and the fire. Hence comes the word immolor, from the sacred mola, or cake.

Virgil

The sailors rejoice to relate their chattering dangers.
 Go then, boys, favouring with tongues and minds,
 Put garlands on the temples, and meal on the knives,
 And adorn the soft hearths, and the green glebe. 85
 I'll soon follow, and the sacred business, which is best, being duly finish'd,

I will then return home ; where, little images, shining
 With brittle wax, shall receive slender crowns.
 Here I will placate our Jupiter, and to my paternal Lares
 Will give frankincense, and will throw down all the colours of the violet. 90

Virgil calls them, falsæ fruges, Æn. ii. 132—3.

— Mihi sacra parari

Et falsæ fruges.

85. Soft hearths, &c.] The poet gave us to understand, l. 2, that his altar was made of turf, or green sod.

86. I'll soon follow.] i. e. After these preparations are made.

— The sacred business, &c.] That of the public sacrifice, which I shall offer.

— Which is best.] Quod præstat—i. e. which is the most material thing, and most necessary to be done.

87. Then return home.] In order to offer private sacrifices on the little turf-altar to my domestic deities.

— Little images, &c.] Little statues of the Lares, or household gods, made of wax, neatly polished, so as to shine. Hence Hor. Epod. ii. l. 66, calls them—residentes Lares.

88. Slender crowns.] Small garlands, or chaplets.

89. Placate.] Appease and render propitious.

— Our Jupiter.] The favourer and guardian of our country ; or, as the poet mentions the worship of Jupiter after his return home, we may suppose, that, among his other little statues, there was one of Jupiter, before which, as before the others, he intended to offer incense, in order to make him propitious.

— Paternal Lares.] Left me by my forefathers, who used to worship them as I do.—See note on Sat. viii. l. 110.

The Romans were very superstitious about these little images of the Lares ; they thought no house safe without them, they constantly worshipped them, and, if they removed, they carried their Lares along with them : they were looked upon as tutelar deities, which protected their houses and lands.

90. Will give.] Will offer ; which they did, by putting it on the Cuncta nitent; longos erexit janua ramos,

Et matutinis operatur festa lucernis.

Nec suspecta tibi sint hæc, Corvine: Catullus,
Pro cujus reditu tot pono altaria, parvos

Et claudentem oculos gallinam impendat amico

Si coepit locuples Gallita & Paccius, orbi, the fire, and fumigating the images, or letting the smoke ascend before them.

— Throw down.] i. e. Will strew before them.

— All the colours, &c.] i. e. Violets of every colour.

91. All things shine.] Every thing looks gay.

— Has erected, &c.] Over the tops of the doors are long branches of laurel. This was usual on these festal occasions.

92. Joyful.] Having a joyful and festival appearance.

— Celebrates.] Operatur. The verb operor, like facio (see Sat. ix. l. 117.) when it stands without any addition, signifies performing sacrifice. See also Virg. Ecl. iii. 77; and Georg. i. l. 339.

So the word נָשַׁר, in Hebr. See Parkh. Heb. and Eng. Lex. נָשַׁר, N° 5.

The poet here means to say, that the very gates of his house bore a part in the solemnity on this joyful occasion. Some are for reading operitur, covered—i. e. the gates were covered with lamps as well as with laurel-branches. This makes a very clear sense; but I question whether operatur, as above explained, does not more exactly coincide with the epithet festa in this line. Operatur here is metaphorical, like Virgil's ridet ager.

— Morning lamps.] It was a custom, on any joyful occasion, either of a public or private nature, to adorn the gates of their houses with branches of laurel, and with lamps, even in the day-time; which Tertullian mentions, in his apology, in the following passage:—"Cur die læto non laureis postes adumbramus? nec lucernis diem infringimus?" "Why, on a joyful day, do we not overshadow our door-posts with laurels—nor infringe upon the day with lamps?"

By the word matutinis, the poet means to say, he will light them

All things shine. My gate has erected long branches,
And joyful celebrates the feast with morning lamps.

Nor let these things be suspected by you, Corvinus : Catullus,

For whose return I place so many altars, has three Little heirs : I should be glad to see who would bestow 95
A hen, sick and closing her eyes, on a friend
So barren : but this is an expence too great. No quail Will ever fall for a father. If rich Gallita and Paccius, Who are childless, begin to perceive heat, every porch them early, out of zeal to his friend, that they might burn from morning to night.

— my portal shines with verdant bays,
And consecrated tapers early blaze. POWER.

93. Suspected, &c.] As if done with a mercenary view, or for selfish ends—as if to flatter my friend Catullus into making me his heir.

94—5. Three little heirs.] Has three children to inherit his estate.

95. Glad to see.] Libet expectare—literally, it liketh me to expect ; which certainly answers to the English idiom in the translation.

96—7. A friend so barren, &c.] So unlikely to leave any thing in his will to any body but his own family—who would sacrifice for such a one, I won't say a fine cock to Æsculapius for his recovery, but even an old rotten hen?—even this would not be worth while.

97. No quail.] Not even one of the least of birds.

98. Ever fall.] i. e. Be killed and offered in sacrifice.

— A father.] i. e. For a man that is the father of children, and who, like Catullus, has heirs to his estate.

— Gallita and Paccius.] Two rich men who were childless, which made them fine objects for the hæridepetæ, or legacy-hunters.

99. Perceive heat.] To be attacked with a fever.

— Every porch, &c.] Tota is here equivalent to omnis.—
q. d. The whole of the porches, i. e. all the porches of the temples, are covered, as it were, with votive tablets for their recovery. These votive tablets were inscribed with the vows and prayers of those who hung them up. If the party, for whom these tablets were hung up, recovered, the offerers of the tablets thought themselves bound to perform their vows.

100. According

Legitimè fixis vestitur tota tabellis 100

 Nec Latio, aut usquam sub nostro fidere talis

 Horum majores, ac dorso ferre cohortes,
 Partem aliquam belli, & euntem in prælia turrim. 110
 Nulla igitur mora per Novium, mora nulla per Istrum

100. According to law.] Legitimè, here, seems to mean, according to the stated custom and usual practice of such people, who made it a kind of law among them to act in this manner on such occasions; not that there was any public law to compel them to it.

101. There exist, &c.] Some there are, who would not scruple to vow an hundred oxen in sacrifice. Hecatombe is compounded of ἑκατόν, an hundred, and βους, an ox; but it also denotes a sacrifice of an hundred sheep, or of any other animals, though primarily is to be understood of oxen, according to the etymology.

102. Elephants, &c.] q. d. They can't get elephants indeed, or else they would vow an hecatomb of them.

102—3. Here—nor in Latium.] Either here at Rome, or in the country of Italy at large. See note, Sat. xi. 115.

104. Conceived.] i. e. Bred.

— A dusky nation.] From the Moors, or the Indians, who are of a swarthy or black complexion. See Sat. xi. l. 125, note.

105. The Rutulian woods, &c.] In the forest near Lavinum, where Turnus the king of the Rutuli reigned, the country was called Etruria; now the dukedom of Tuscany.

106. The herd of Cæsar.] Domitian, as a matter of state and curiosity, transported into Italy numbers of elephants; and, in the forest above mentioned, an herd of them might be seen together.

106—7. No private man.] They were not procured to be at any private man's command, but at the emperor's only, for his pleasure and amusement, in seeing them in the forest, and exhibiting them in the public shews in the Circus.

107. Ancestors

SAT. XII. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 125

Is clothed with tablets fixed according to law. 100
 There exist who would promise an hecatomb.
 Inasmuch as here are no elephants, nor to be sold, Nor in Latium, nor any where in our climate is such A beast conceived, but, fetched from a dusky nation,
 Is fed in the Rutulian woods, and in the field of Turnus, 105
 The herd of Cæsar, procured to serve no private Man : the ancestors of these, indeed, used to obey Tyrian
 Hannibal, and our generals, and the Molossian king,
 And to carry cohorts on their back,
 Some part of the war, and a tower going to battles. 110
 Therefore there is no delay by Novius, no delay by

107. Ancestors of these.] The elephants of former days were put to a nobler use.

107—8. Tyrian Hannibal.] Who got them from India, with persons to manage and train them up. Hannibal is called Tyrian, because Dido, who built Carthage, came from Tyre :—for this reason Virgil calls Carthage Tyriam Urbem. The Carthaginians Tyrii.—In the second Punic war, when he came over the Alps into Italy, he brought elephants with him. See Sat. x. l. 157, note.

108. Our generals.] Who took vast numbers of them.—Metellus had two hundred and four elephants which followed his triumph after the defeat of Asdrubal the Carthaginian general.—Scipio, the father-in-law of Pompey, had also elephants in his army in Africa. Appian says, thirty.

—Molossian king.] Pyrrhus, king of the Molossians, first used elephants in Italy, when he came to help the Tarentines against the Romans.

109. Cohorts.] A cohort was a tenth part of a legion—several of these were in towers on the backs of elephants, and made part of the warlike force—partem belli.

110. A tower, &c.] Towers, made of wood, and filled with armed men, were put on the backs of elephants, and thus carried into battle, where, partly by the trampling of elephants, partly by the arrows, javelins, and other missile weapons, discharged from the towers, great havoc was made.

111. Therefore—no delay, &c.] Therefore it is not the fault of Novius, &c. that elephants are not offered, but because they can't get them.—If these legacy-hunters could procure elephants to sacrifice for the recovery of the people whom they have a design upon, they would not hesitate a moment about doing it.

112. See

112. Ivory.] Elephants, per synec. Here elephants are called ivory, from their large teeth of ivory. Georg. iii. 26. Æn. vi. 895. Virgil, on the contrary, calls ivory, elephant, by the same figure.

113. Before the Lares of Gallita.] In order to procure their assistance and favour towards him, that they may recover him from his sickness.

The word Lares, in the largest sense, denotes certain demons, genii, or spirits, believed to preside on various occasions, distinguished by their epithets. As, Lares cœlestes, some of the Dii majorum gentium; Lares marini, as Neptune, Palæmon, Thetis, &c.; Lares urbium, who were guardians of cities. The Lares also were public, as compitales, or viales, which were worshipped in the highways; or private, as the Lares domestici, or familiares, household or family deities, household gods, the protectors of the house and family. These last are usually intended by the word Lares, when used singly. See l. 89, note. See ANSW. Lar.

The notæ selectæ on this line, suppose this Gallita to have been some rich childless matron, whom Tacitus calls Crispellina. Others believe it to be a rich old man of that name. It matters not to the subject which is right. See Juv. edit. 4to. 1695.

114. Worthy, &c.] The poet ironically styles these elephants worthy victims for such important deities as the Lares, who presided over the safety of such men, and worthy to express the huge friendship which the offerers bore them. Or, perhaps, by the word tantis, we may understand an humorous contrast, between the hugeness of the animal offered, and the littleness of the figures of the Lares before which they were offered; for the images of these were very small. See l. 87, note. Captatores were people who flattered rich men, in hopes of being their heirs—legacy-hunters. See Sat. x. l. 202, note; and see Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. v. l. 23, &c.

115. The one.] Pacuvius.—Alter, where two have been mentioned,

hind. 120

tioned, means one of them. That Pacuvius is here meant, appears from what follows, l. 125—8.

115. If you allow, &c.] If he could have his own will, and could be permitted to do such a thing.

— Vow.] i. e. Devote to death.

116. Flock of servants, &c.] He would pick out, from the number of his slaves, the stoutest of the men, or every one (quæque) of the most beautiful of either sex, to sacrifice.

117. His boys, &c.] He would even sacrifice those who were the instruments of his abominable pleasures.

118. Put fillets.] The vittæ were ribbands, or garlands, put on the foreheads both of the priests and of the victims.

118—19. Marriageable Iphigenia.] Any daughter in the prime of youth and beauty. Matura virgo—Hor. Lib. iii. Od. vi. l. 22. Comp. Hor. Lib. i. Od. xxiii. l. 11, 12.

This alludes to the story of Agamemnon sacrificing his daughter Iphigenia, in order to procure a favourable wind for the departure of the Grecian fleet from Aulis, where, through the anger of the goddess Diana, it had been wind-bound for a considerable time, because the Greeks had killed an hind belonging to the goddess.

The oracle was consulted, and the answer was returned, that no wind could be had for their purpose, unless Agamemnon, the chief in the expedition, would offer up his daughter Iphigenia to appease the anger of Diana. Agamemnon, for the public good, brought his daughter to the altar, but the goddess, relenting, conveyed her away, and put an hind in her place.

119. Give her, &c.] Offer her up as a sacrifice.

120. Furtive expiation.] Alluding to Diana's stealing away Iphigenia, and substituting the hind in her place.

— Tragic hind.] Which had become a subject for the tragic writers, as Sophocles, Euripides, and others.

Pacuvius

Laudo meum civem, nec comparo testamento
 Mille rates : nam si Libitinam evaserit æger, Delebit tabulas, inclusus carcere nassæ,
 Post meritum sanè mirandum ; atque omnia soli
 Forſan Pacuvio breviter dabit, ille ſuperbus 125
 Incedet victis rivalibus. ergo vides, quàm
 Grande operæ pretium faciat jugulata Mycenis.
 Vivat Pacuvius, quæſo, vel Neſtora totum :
 Poſſideat, quantum rapuit Nero : montibus aurum
 Exæquet ; nec amet quenquam, nec ametur ab ullo. 130

Pacuvius would consent to offer his daughter, though he were certain that nothing of this sort would happen to save her.

121. I praise my citizen.] I highly commend my fellow-citizen Pacuvius for his wisdom and address.

— Nor do I compare, &c.] To be sure the safety of a thousand ships, which could bring no peculiar and immediate profit to Agamemnon, and only answer a public purpose, is not to be compared with the last will and testament of a rich man, by which Pacuvius was to become so richly benefited as to possess his whole estate. Pacuvius therefore is certainly more justifiable than Agamemnon, in being willing to sacrifice his daughter.—A strong irony!

122. Escape Libitina.] i. e. Should recover from his sickness. Libitina was a name given to Proserpine, as presiding over funerals ; in her temple at Rome all things pertaining to funerals were sold, and the undertakers were called Libitinarii : hence, libitina sometimes signifies death itself.

123. Cancel his will.] Lit. blot out the tables.—It has been before observed (Sat. ii. l. 58.) that the Romans wrote on thin planks of wood, called tabulæ : these were smeared over with wax, on which the letters were made with the point of a sort of bodkin, called stylus, which was flat at one end, in order to blot out, or erase, such of the writing as they meant to cancel or alter. See Hor. Sat. x. Lib. i. l. 72.

— Prison of a net.] Nassa signifies a net made of twigs, with a bait put into it, to catch fish.

The rich man is here represented as fairly hampered in the net which Pacuvius had laid for him—thoroughly taken in, as we say.

124. Desert truly wonderful.] On account of such wonderful merit towards him, as Pacuvius had shewn, in lavishing such sacrifices for his recovery.

125. Will give shortly, &c.] Having cancelled his will, and erased all the legacies which he had left in it to other people, he now in a few words (breviter) makes Pacuvius his sole heir.

125. Then

I praise my citizen, nor do I compare with a last will
 A thousand ships : for if the sick man should escape Libitina, He'll cancel his will, inclosed in the prison of a net,
 After desert truly wonderful ; and every thing, perhaps,
 Will give shortly to Pacuvius alone. He proud will 125
 Strut, his rivals overcome. Therefore you see, how Great a reward of service she slaughter'd at Mycenæ may procure.

Let Pacuvius live, I beg, even all Nestor.
 May he possess as much as Nero plunder'd—may gold equal Mountains ; nor let him love any body, nor be loved by any body. 130

125—6. Will strut, &c.] Incedo sometimes means to walk or go in state. (Divum incedo regina, says the haughty Juno, Æn. i. l. 50.) The poet here means, that this fellow will take state upon him, and strut with an insolence in his look and gait, triumphing over all those who had been his competitors for Gal-lita's favour.

126. Therefore you see, &c.] q. d. You see of what use the example of Agamemnon was to Pacuvius ; for if that king of Mycenæ had not offered his daughter to have her throat cut, Pacuvius had never thought of sacrificing his daughter for the recovery of the rich man who made him heir to all his estate.

128. Let Pacuvius live, &c.] Long live Pacuvius ! say I (iron.) for the longer such a man lives, the more miserable must he be.

— All Nestor.] Even to Nestor's age. See Sat. x. l. 246—7, note.

129. Nero plunder'd.] Who, contrary to all laws, human and divine, not only plundered the people, but even the temples of the gods. The prodigious sums, which he extorted from the provinces, by unreasonable taxes, confiscations, &c. are almost incredible. He gave no office without this charge to the person who filled it—"You know what I want—let us make it "our business that nobody may have any thing."

— May gold, &c.] May heaps of ill-gotten wealth be his torment, and make him a prey to others, as others have been to him.

130. Nor let him love, &c.] This finishes completely the poet's imprecatory climax—for how thoroughly miserable must he be, who lives and dies a total stranger to the sweets of friendship !

END OF THE TWELFTH SATIRE.

S A T I R A XIII.

A R G U M E N T.

The Poet writes this Satire to Calvinus, to comfort him under the loss of a large sum of money, with which he had intrusted one of his friends, and which he could not get again. Hence Juvenal takes occasion to speak of the villainy of the times—

EXEMPLO quodcunque malo committitur, ipsi
Displicet auctori. prima est hæc ultio, quòd se Judice nemo nocens absolvitur; improba quamvis Gratia fallacis prætoris vicerit urnam.

Line 1. With bad example.] Every evil deed which tends to set a bad example to others.

— Displeases, &c.] Gives him unpleasant sensations.

2. First revenge, &c.] The vengeance which first seizes upon him, arises from himself; his own conscience will condemn him, though he should have no other judge.

4. Should overcome the urn, &c.] Vicerit—i. e. should have defeated the urn's impartial decision, and have declared him innocent.—The prætor, who was the chief judge, had others appointed with him as assistants. The names of these were written upon little balls, and cast into an urn by the prætor: after they were shaken together, he drew out as many as the law required for the cause; after which the parties had power to reject such as they thought would be partial. The number of those excepted against were filled up by the prætor's drawing other names out of the urn. Then the judges, which were thus appointed, took an oath to judge according to law; but, on many occasions, others were often substituted by the prætor. The cause being heard, the prætor gave to each of the judges three waxen tables. On one was the letter A, to signify the acquittal or absolution of the defendant. On another C, to imply his condemnation.

On another N L, for non liquet, signified that a farther hearing was necessary; which delay of the cause was called ampliation. Then the judges, being called upon, cast the billet, expressing their opinion, into the urn, according to which the prætor pronounced sentence. But if the prætor was a wicked judge, and inclined that partiality should get the better of justice, he might so manage matters, in all these many turns of the business, that the defendant, however guilty, might appear to have the urn in his favour. This our poet very properly calls—Improba gratia fallacis prætoris.

5. What do you suppose, &c.] What, think you, are the opinions of people in general, of this injustice which you lately suffered, and of the breach of trust in your friend, of which you so loudly complain?

—Calvinus.] Juvenal's friend, to whom he addresses this Satire: And here he comforts him by many considerations: first, that he must have all the world on his side—every body must join with him in condemning such a transaction.

7. So small an income.] Another comfort is, that his circum-

7. The burden, &c.] A metaphor taken from a ship's sinking by being overloaded.

8. Rare, &c.] His case was not singular, but very commonly happened to many as well as to Calvinus : he therefore must not look upon himself as a sufferer beyond others.

10. Trite.] Common.

— Drawn from the midst, &c.] Not taken from the top, or summit, of that heap of miseries, which Fortune stores up for mankind, but from the middle, as it were—not so small as not to be felt, nor so severe as to overwhelm you. He calls it, Onus mediocris jacturæ, l. 7, 8.

11. Too many sighs.] Immoderate grief.

— More violent, &c.] A man's concern should never exceed the proper bounds.

12. Than his wound.] Should not rise higher than that which occasions it requires. Sorrow should be proportioned to suffering.

14. Burning, &c.] Your very bowels on fire with rage and indignation. We often find the intestines, such as the heart, liver, and bowels, or entrails, represented as the seat of moral feelings.

15. Your friend, &c.] The poet calls the money which Calvinus had intrusted his false friend with, and which he was afraid to lose, a sacred deposit, because delivered to him to keep, under the sacred confidence of friendship.

16. Does

Of a moderate loss should sink you : nor do we see rare
Those things which you suffer. This misfortune is known to many, and now

Trite, and drawn from the midst of Fortune's heap. 10 Let us lay aside too many sighs. More violent than what is just,

The grief of a man ought not to be, nor greater than his wound.

Tho' you can hardly bear the least, and small particle
Of light misfortunes, burning with fretting Bowels, because your friend may not return to you a sac-cred 15

Deposited, does he wonder at this, who already has left behind
His back sixty years, born when Fonteius was consul ?
Do you profit nothing for the better by the experience of so many things ?

Wisdom, indeed, which gives precepts in the sacred books,
Is the great conqueror of Fortune. But we call 20
Those also happy, who, to bear the inconveniences of life,

16. Does he wonder, &c.] Does my friend Calvinus, now turned of sixty, and consequently well acquainted with the nature of mankind from many years experience, stand astonished at such a common transaction as this ?

17. Fonteius.] L. Fonteius Capito was consul with C. Vip-sianus, in the reign of Nero.

18. Of so many things ?] Of so many things of a like kind, which your knowledge of the world must have brought to your observation—has all your experience of men and things been of no use or profit to you ?

19. Wisdom, indeed, &c.] The volumes of philosophers, held sacred by the followers of them, contain rules for a contempt of fortune ; and the wisdom by which they were indited, and which they teach, is the great principle which triumphs over the misfortunes we meet with. So Seneca, Epist. 98. Valen-tior omni fortuna est animus sapientis.—The books of moral philosophy abound in maxims of this kind.

Nec jactare jugum, vitâ didicere magistrâ.

Quæ tam festa dies, ut cesset prodere furem,

Perfidiam, fraudes, atque omni ex crimine lucrum

Quæsitum, & partos gladio vel pyxide nummos? 25

RARI QUIPPE BONI: numero vix sunt totidem, quot Thebarum portæ, vel divitis ostia Nili.

Nunc ætas agitur, pejoraque sæcula ferri

Temporibus: quorum sceleri non invenit ipsa

Nomen, & à nullo posuit natura metallo. 30

22. Nor to toss the yoke.] A metaphor taken from oxen which are restive, and endeavour to get rid of the yoke, by flinging and tossing their necks about.

The poet means, that much may be learned on the subject of triumphing over fortune from the sacred volumes of philosophy: but those are to be pronounced happy also, who, by the experience of life only, have learned to bear, with quietness, submission, and patience, any inconveniences, or misfortunes, which they may meet with.

HOR. Lib. i. Ode xxiv. ad fin.

See Jer. xxxi. 18.

—Life being their mistress, &c.] Their teacher or instructor—I. e. who are instructed by what they meet with in common life, and profit by daily experience.

—To know
That which before us lies in daily life
Is the prime wisdom. MILTON.

23. What day, &c.] Festa dies, signifies a day set apart for the observance of some festival, on which some sacrifices or religious rites were performed; a holiday, as we call it.

Festus also signifies happy, joyful. Perhaps the poet means to say, what day is so happy as not to produce some mischief or other?

24. Gain sought, &c.] Every sort of wickedness practised for the sake of gain.

25. Money gotten.] Somebody or other murdered for their money, either more openly by the sword, or more secretly by poison.

—Poison.] Pyxis signifies a little box; but here, by me-ton.

Nor to toſe the yoke have learnt, life being their miſtreſs.

What day ſo ſolemn, that it can ceaſe to diſcloſe a thief,
Perfidy, frauds, and gain ſought from every crime,
And money gotten by the ſword, or by poiſon? 25

For GOOD MEN ARE SCARCE: they are hardly as many in number,

As the gates of Thebes, or the mouths of the rich Nile.
An age is now paſſing, and worſe ages than the times of Iron; for the wickedneſs of which, nature itſelf has not Found a name, nor impoſed it from any metal, 30

ton. poiſon, which uſed to be kept in ſuch boxes, by way of concealment and eaſineſs of conveyance,

27. Thebes.] A city of Bœotia, built by Cadmus, the ſon of Agenor; it was called Heptapylos, from having ſeven gates.—There was another Thebes in Ægypt, built by Buſiris, king of Ægypt, which was called Heliopolis, famous for an hundred gates. The firſt is meant here.

— Mouths of the rich Nile.] Which were ſeven. The Nile is called rich, becauſe it made Ægypt fruitful by its overflowing, thus enriching all the country within its reach.

28. An age, &c.] i. e. The preſent age in which we live, now paſſing on in the courſe of time. The verb ago, when applied to age or life, has this ſignification: hence agere vitam, to live. Si octogemum agerent annum: if they were eighty years old. CIC.

— Worſe ages.] The word ſæculum, like ætas, means an age; a period of an hundred years.—Here the poet would re- preſent the age in which he wrote, as worſe than any that had gone before.

28—9. The times of iron.] The laſt of the four ages into which the world was ſuppoſed to be divided, and which was worſe than the three preceding. See Ov. Met. Lib. i.

29. Nature itſelf, &c.] The wickedneſs of the preſent age is ſo great, that nothing in nature can furniſh us with a proper name to call it by.

30. Impoſed, &c.] Lit. put it.—q. d. Nor has any name been affixed to it from any metal.—The firſt age of the world was named Golden, from its reſembling gold in purity—and after this came the Silver, the Brazen, the Iron Age; but now the age is ſo bad, that no metal can furniſh it with a name which can properly deſcribe the nature of it. Nomen ponere ſignifies to put or affix a name—i. e. to name. Nature herſelf can find no metal baſe enough to call it by.

31. We invoke, &c.] Proh Deûm atque hominum fidem! was a usual exclamation on any thing wonderful, or surprising, happening.—q. d. We can seem much amazed, and cry out aloud against the vices of the age—we can call heaven and earth to witness our indignation.

32. The vocal sportula.] The dole-basket; the hope of sharing which opens the mouths of the people who stand by Fæsidius while he is pleading at the bar, and makes them, with loud shouts, extol his eloquence: hence the poet calls it vocalis sportula. See a like manner of expression, Sat. xii. l. 82. See an account of the sportula, Sat. i. l. 95, note. Comp. Sat. x. l. 46. Hor. Lib. i. Epist. xix. l. 37—8.

Non ego ventosæ plebis suffragia venor

“ I never hunt th’ inconstant people’s vote,
 “ With costly suppers, or a threadbare coat.”

FRANCIS.

The name Fæsidius, or Fessidius, as some editions have it, may mean some vain pleader of the time, who courted the applause of the mob, by treating them with his sportula. Perhaps no particular person may be only meant, but such sort of people in general.

33. Old man, worthy the bulla.] The bulla was an ornament worn about the necks of children, or at their breasts, made like an heart, and hollow within; they wore it till seventeen years of age, and then hung it up to the household gods.—Perf. Sat. v. l. 31.

The poet addresses himself to his old friend Calvinus, in a joking manner; as if he said—“ Well, old gentleman (comp. l. 16, 17.) worthy again to wear your childish baubles, are you, at sixty years old, such a child, as not to know—

34. What charms, &c.] i. e. As to be ignorant how great the temptation

 What charms the money of another has? know you not What a laugh your simplicity may stir up in the vulgar,

Temples there is some deity, and to the reddening altar?
 Formerly our natives lived in this manner, before Saturn flying, took the rustic sickle, his diadem temptation is, when a knave has other people's money in his power?

35. What a laugh, &c.] How the whole town will laugh at your simplicity.

35—6. When you require, &c.] q. d. If you expect that people won't forswear themselves, when perjury is so common.

36. Should think.] i. e. And require that they should think,
 &c.

37. Some deity, &c.] Should believe that religion is not all a farce, but that really there is not any of the temples without some deity which notices the actions and behaviour of men, so as to punish perjury and breach of faith.

— The reddening altar.] i. e. Red with the blood of the sacrifices, or with the fire upon it.

q. d. How childish would you appear, and what a laughter would be raised against you, if you professed to expect either religion or morals in the present age?

38. Natives.] Indigenæ.—The first natives and inhabitants of Italy, our home-bred ancestors.

— Lived in this manner.] Avoiding perjury and fraud, and believing the presence of the gods in their temples, and at their altars.

39. Saturn flying.] Saturn was expelled from Crete by his son Jupiter, and fled into Italy, where he hid himself, which from thence was called Latium, a latendo, and the people Latins.
 See Virg. Æn. viii. l. 319—20. The poet means the Golden Age (comp. Sat. vi. l. 1, & seq. where Juvenal speaks of the simplicity of those times) which the poets place during the reign of Saturn.

— Rustic sickle.—] Or scythe, which Saturn is said to have invented, and to have taught the people husbandry, after his expulsion from his kingdom; for during the Golden Age, the earth brought

brought forth every thing without culture. See Ovid, Met. Lib. i. Fab. iii.

39. His diadem, &c.] His kingdom being seized by his son Jupiter, and he being driven out of it.

40. When Juno, &c.] The daughter of Saturn, sister and wife to Jupiter—a little girl—i. e. before she was grown up, and marriageable. In Sat. vi. l. 15, he speaks of Jupiter in a state of impuberty, in the time of the Golden Age.

41. Idæan caves.] Jupiter, when born, was carried to Mount Ida, in Crete, where he was concealed, and bred up, lest his father Saturn should devour him. See ANSW. Saturnus.

42. No feasts, &c.] No carousing, as in after times there was supposed to be. Comp. l. 45.

43. Iliacan boy.] Ganymede, the son of Tros, king of Troy, or Ilium, whom Jupiter, in the form of an eagle, snatched up from Mount Ida, and, displacing Hebe, made cup-bearer at the feasts of the gods.

— Wife of Hercules.] Hebe, the daughter of Juno, and cup-bearer to Jupiter; she happened to make a slip at a banquet of the gods, so was turned out of her place, and Ganymede put into it: she was afterwards married to Hercules.

44. The nectar, &c.] Nectar, a pleasant liquor, feigned to be the drink of the gods.—Siccato nectare, the nectar being all drunk up, the feast now over (see Sat. v. l. 47, siccabis calicem) Vulcan retired to his forge.—All this happened after the Golden Age, but not during the continuance of it.

45. Wiping his arms.] From the soot and dirt contracted in his filthy shop.

— Liparæan.] Near Sicily were several islands, called the Lipary Islands; in one of which, called Vulcania, Vulcan's forge

Laid down: then, when Juno was a little girl, 40
 And Jupiter as yet private in the Idæan caves.

 Nor a wheel, nor furies, nor a stone, or the punishment of forge was fabled to be. See Virg. viii. 416, & seq. This was in the neighbourhood of Mount Aetna. See Sat. i. l. 8.

46. Every god dined by himself.] The poet here, and in the whole of this passage, seems to make very free with the theology of his country, and, indeed, to satirize the gods of Rome as freely as he does the people.

— Crowd of gods.] The number of gods which the Romans worshipped, might well be called turba deorum, for they amounted to above thirty thousand.

47. This day.] The Roman polytheism and idolatry went hand in hand with the wickedness of the times; they had a god for every vice, both natural and unnatural. The awful origin of all this, as well as its consequences, is set down by St. Paul, Rom. i. ver. 21—32.

— The stars.] The heavens, per metonym.

48. Urged miserable Atlas.] A high hill in Mauritania, feigned by the poets to bear up the heavens. See Sat. viii. 32, note.

49. Shared the sad empire, &c.] The world as yet was not divided by lot among the three sons of Saturn, by which Neptune shared the dominion of the sea—Jupiter heaven—and Pluto the infernal regions.

50. His Sicilian wife.] Proserpine, the daughter of Ceres, whom Pluto ravished out of Sicily, and made her his wife.

51. A wheel.] Alluding to the story of Ixion, the father of the Centaurs—Jupiter took him up into heaven, where he would have ravished Juno, but Jupiter formed a cloud in her shape, on which he begat the Centaurs. He was cast down to hell, for boasting boasting that he had lain with Juno, where he was tied to a wheel and surrounded with serpents.

51. Furies.] Of which there were three, Alecto, Megæra, Tisiphone. These were sisters, the daughters of Acheron and Nox; they are described with torches in their hands, and snakes, instead of hair, on their heads.

— A stone.] Alluding to Sisyphus the son of Æolus; he greatly infested Attica with his robberies, but, being slain by Theseus, he was sent to hell, and condemned to roll a great stone up an hill, which stone, when he had got it to the top, rolled back again, so that his labour was to be constantly renewed.

51—2. Black vulture.] Prometheus was chained to Mount Caucasus for stealing fire from heaven, where a black vulture was continually preying on his liver, which grew as fast as it was devoured.

52. But the shades.] The ghosts of the departed—were — Happy without infernal kings.] For there being, at that time, no crimes, there wanted no laws nor kings to enforce them; of course no punishments.

53. Improbability, &c.] Villainy of all kinds was scarcely known—any crime would have been a wonder.

55. If a youth, &c.] In those days of purity and innocence, the highest subordination was maintained. It was a capital crime for a young man even to have sitten down in the presence of an old one, or if sitting, not to have risen up on his approach. Comp. Job xxix. 8.

So for a boy not to have done the same in the presence of a youth, now arrived at the age of puberty, which was indicated by having a beard.

Vulture : but the shades happy without infernal kings.
 Improbability was in that age to be wonder'd at.
 They believed this a great crime, and to be punish'd by death,
 If a youth had not risen up to an old man, and if 55
 A boy to any who had a beard : tho' he might see
 At home more strawberries, and greater heaps of acorn.
 So-venerable was it to precede by four years,
 And the first down was so equal to sacred old age.
 Now, if a friend should not deny a deposit, 60
 If he should restore an old purse with all the rust ;
 Prodigious faithfulness ! and worthy the Tuscan books !
 And which ought to be expiated by a crowned she-lamb.

56. Tho' he might see, &c.] Strawberries, acorns, and such-like, are here supposed to be the first food of mankind in the Golden Age. The poet's meaning here is, that superiority in age always challenged the respect above mentioned, from the younger to the elder, though the former might be richer, in the possessions of those days, than the latter.

58. So venerable, &c.] So observant were they of the deference paid to age, that even a difference of four years was to create respect, inasmuch that the first appearance of down upon the chin was to be venerated by younger persons, as the venerable beard of old age was by those grown to manhood ; so there was an equal and proportionate subordination throughout.

60. Now.] In our day.

— Should not deny.] Either deny that he received it, or should not refuse to deliver it.

— A deposit.] Something committed to his trust.

61. With all the rust.] i. e. The coin, which has lain by so long as to have contracted a rust, not having been used. Meton.

62. Prodigious faithfulness !] Such a thing would be looked upon, in these times, as a prodigy of honesty.

— Worthy the Tuscan books !] To be recorded there among other prodigies. It is said, that the art of soothsaying first came from the Tuscans, which consisted in foretelling future events from prodigies ; these were recorded in books, and were consulted on occasion of any thing happening of the marvellous kind, as authorities for the determinations of the aruspices, or soothsayers, thereupon.

63. Expiated, &c.] When any prodigy happened, the custom of the Tuscans was to make an expiation by sacrifice, in order

Egregium sanctumque virum si cerno, bimembri
 Hoc monstrum puero, vel mirandis sub aratro 65
 Piscibus inventis, & fœtæ comparo mulæ;
 Sollicitus tanquam lapides effuderit imber,
 Examenque apium longâ confederit uvâ
 Culmine delubri, tanquam in mare fluxerit amnis
 Gurgitibus miris, & lactis vortice torrens. 70
 Intercepta decem quereris sestertia fraude
 Sacrilega? quid si bis centum perdidit alter
 Hoc arcana modo? majorem tertius illâ
 Summam, quam patulæ vix ceperat angulus arcæ?
 Tam facile & pronum est Superos contemnere testes, 75 order to avert the consequences of ill omens, which were gathered from prodigies. This the Romans followed.

63. A crowned she-lamb.] They put garlands of flowers, or ribbands, on the heads of the victims.—A she-lamb was the offering on such an occasion.

64. An excellent.] Egregium—ex toto grege lectum—i. e. as we say, one taken out of the common herd of mankind—choice—singular for great and good qualities.

65. A boy of two parts.] A monstrous birth, as prodigious as a child born with parts of two different species: hence the Centaurs were called bimembres.

— Wonderful fishes, &c.] A wondrous shoal of fish unexpectedly turned up in ploughing the ground.

66. A mule with foal.] Which was never known to happen. Though Appian, Lib. i. says, that, before the coming of Sylla, a mule brought forth in the city. This must be looked on as fabulous.

67. Anxious.] Solicitous for the event.

— As if a shower, &c.] As if the clouds rained showers of stones.

68. A swarm, &c.] It was accounted ominous if a swarm of bees settled on an house, or on a temple.

— Long bunch.] When bees swarm and settle any where, they all cling to one another, and hang down, a considerable length, in the form of a bunch of grapes. Hence, Virg. Georg. iv. 557—8.

— Jamque arbore summâ Confluere, & lentis uvam demittere ramis.

69. A river, &c.] All rivers run into the sea, and many with great violence; therefore the poet cannot mean that there

If I perceive an excellent and upright man, I compare
 This monster to a boy of two parts, or to wonderful fishes 65
 Found under a plough, or to a mule with foal.
 Anxious as if a shower had pour'd forth stones,
 And a swarm of bees had settled, in a long bunch,
 On the top of a temple, as if a river had flow'd into the sea With wond'rous gulfs, and rushing with a whirlpool of milk. 70

Do you complain that ten sestertiums are intercepted by Impious fraud? what if another has lost two hundred secret Sestertiums in this manner? a third a larger sum than that,
 Which the corner of his wide chest had scarce received?
 So easy and ready it is, to condemn the gods who are witnesses, 75

is any wonder in this—but in flowing with unusual and portentuous appearances, such as being mixed with blood, which Livy speaks of, Lib. xxiv. c. 10, or the like.

70. Rushing.] Torrens—violent, headlong, running in full stream, like the rushing of a land-flood, with dreadful violence, eddying in whirlpools of milk.—When we consider what has been said in the last seven lines, what an idea does it give us of the state of morals at Rome in the time of Juvenal!

71. Ten sestertiums.] About 80l. 14s. 7d. of our money.

— Intercepted.] i. e. Prevented from coming to your hands.

72. What if another, &c.] The poet endeavours to comfort his friend under his loss, and to keep him from indulging too great a concern about it, by wishing him to consider that he is not so great a sufferer as many others perhaps might be by a like fraud.

— Secret, &c.] Arcana—q. d. his centum sestertia arcana—i. e. delivered or lent secretly, when no witnesses were by, as had been the case of Juvenal's friend Calvinus.

74. Which the corner, &c.] Another, says he, may have lost so large a sum of money, as even to be greater than could be easily contained in a large chest, though stuffed at every corner, in which he had stowed it.

75. So easy and ready, &c.] So prone are men to despise the gods, who are witnesses to all their actions, that if they can but hide them from the eyes of men, they make themselves quite easy under the commission of the greatest frauds.

76. Behold,

Si mortalis idem nemo sciat. aspice quantā
 Voce neget; quæ sit ficti constantia vultus.

76. Behold, with how great, &c.] This contempt of the gods is carried so far, that men will not only defraud, but, with a loud unflinching voice, and the most unembarrassed countenance, deny every thing that's laid to their charge; and this by the grossest perjury.

77. Feigned countenance.] Putting on, in his looks, a semblance of truth and honesty.

78. By the rays of the sun.] This was an usual oath. See Æn. iii. 599, 600, and note. Delph. edit.

— Tarpeian thunderbolts.] i. e. The thunder of Jupiter, who had a temple on the Tarpeian rock. See Sat. vi. l. 47, note.

79. Cyrrhæan prophet.] Apollo, who had an oracle at Delphos, near Cirrha, a city of Phocis, where he was worshipped.

80. Virgin-huntress.] Puellæ venatricis.—Diana, the fabled goddess of hunting; she, out of chastity, avoided all company of men, retired into the woods, and there exercised herself in hunting.

81. Trident.] Neptune's trident was a sort of spear with three prongs at the end, and denoted his being king of the sea, which surrounded the three then known parts of the world. With this instrument he is usually represented, and with this he was supposed to govern the sea, and even to shake the earth itself: so that there is no wonder that the superstitious heathen should swear by it, as Neptune was so considerable an object of their veneration and worship. See Virg. Æn. i. 142, 149, & al.

81. Father of Ægeus.] Ægeus was the son of Neptune, the father of Theseus. He reigned at Athens—he threw himself into the Ægean Sea, which was so named after him.

82. Herculean bows.] Perhaps the poet particularly here alludes to those fatal bows and arrows of Hercules, which he gave to Philoctetes, the son of Peas, king of Melibœa, a city of Thesaly, at the foot of Mount Ossa; and which weapons, unless Philoctetes

If that same thing no mortal can know. Behold, with how

A voice he denies it, what steadiness there is of feigned countenance.

By the rays of the sun, and the Tarpeian thunderbolts he swears;

And the javelin of Mars, and the darts of the Cyrrhæan prophet;

By the shafts, and the quiver of the virgin-huntress, 80

And by thy trident, O Neptune, father of Ægeus:

He adds also the Herculean bows, and the spear of Minerva,
Whatever the armories of heaven have of weapons;

And truly if he be a father, I would eat, says he, a doleful Part of the head of my boiled son, and wet with Pharian vinegar. 85

There are who place all things in the chances of Fortune,

Philoctetes had carried to Troy, it was fated that the city could not have been taken. See Virg. Æn. iii. 402, and note, Delph.

83. Armories of heaven.] Juvenal held the Roman mythology in great contempt—he certainly means, here, to deride the folly of imagining that the gods had arsenals or repositories of arms.

84. A father, &c.] Here is an allusion to the story of Thyestes, the brother of Atreus, who, having committed adultery with the wife of Atreus, Atreus in revenge killed and dressed the child born of her, and served him up to his brother at his own table.

The defrauder is represented as perjuring himself by many oaths; and now he wishes, that the fate of Thyestes may be his, that he may have his son dressed and served up to table for him to eat, if he be guilty of the fraud which is laid to his charge.

85. Part of the head.] Sinciput signifies the fore-part, or, perhaps, one half of the head, when divided downwards. See AINSW. Quasi semicaput—or, a scindendo, from whence sinciput.

— Pharian vinegar.] Pharos was an island of Ægypt, from whence came the best vinegar, of which were made sauces and seasonings for victuals of various kinds. The poet does not add this without an ironical sting at the luxury of his day.

86. There are, &c.] i. e. There are some so atheistically inclined, as to attribute all events to mere chance.

Et nullo credunt mundum rectore moveri,
 Naturâ volvente vices & lucis, & anni,
 Atque ideo intrepidi quæcunque altaria tangunt.

Est alius, metuens ne crimen pœna sequatur, 90
 Hic putat esse Deos, & pejerat, atque ita secum;
 Decernat quodcunque volet de corpore nostro
 Isis, & irato feriat meâ lumina sistro, Dummodò vel cæcus teneam, quos abnego, nummos.
 Et phthisis, & vomicæ putres, & dimidium crus 95
 Sunt tanti? pauper locupletem optare podagram
 Ne dubitet Ladas, si non eget Anticyrâ, nec

87. The world to be moved, &c.] Epicurus and his followers acknowledged that there were gods, but that they took no care of human affairs, nor interfered in the management of the world. So Hor. Sat. v. Lib. i. l. 101—3.

Deos didici securum agere ævum,
 Nec, si quid miri faciat natura, Deos id
 Tristes ex alto cœli demittere tectò.

88. Nature, &c.] A blind principle, which they call nature, bringing about the revolutions of days and years—(lucis & anni)—acting merely mechanically, and without design.

89. Intrepid they touch, &c.] When a man would put another to his solemn oath, he brought him to a temple, and there made him swear, laying his hand upon the altar. But what constraint could this have on the consciences of those who did not believe in the interference of the gods—what altars could they be afraid to touch, and to swear by in the most solemn manner, if they thought that perjury was not noticed?

90. Another, &c.] The poet, having before mentioned atheists, who thought the world governed by mere chance, or, though they might allow that there were gods, yet that these did not concern themselves in the ordering of human affairs, now comes to another sort, who did really allow, not only the existence, but also the providence of the gods, and their attention to what passed among mortals, and yet such persons having a salvo, to console themselves under the commission of crimes, which he well describes in the following lines.

91. Thus with himself.] i. e. Thus argues with himself, allowing and fearing that he will be punished.

92. Let Isis, &c.] Isis was originally an Egyptian goddess; but the Romans having adopted her among their deities, they built her a temple at Rome, where they worshipped her.

She was

And believe the world to be moved by no governor, Nature turning about the changes both of the light and year,
And therefore intrepid they touch any altars whatsoever.

Another is fearing lest punishment may follow a crime : 90
He thinks there are gods, and forswears, and thus with himself—

“ Let Isis decree whatever she will concerning this body
“ Of mine, and strike my eyes with her angry sistrum, “ So that, even blind, I may keep the money which I deny.
“ Are a phthisic; or putrid sores, or half a leg 95
“ Of such consequence? let not poor Ladas doubt to wish for “ The rich gout, if he does not want Anticyra, nor was supposed to be much concerned in inflicting diseases and maladies on mankind, and particularly on the perjured.

93. Strike my eyes.] Strike me blind.

— Angry sistrum.] The sistrum was a musical instrument; it is variously described, but generally thought to be a sort of timbrel, of an oval, or a triangular form, with loose rings on the edges, which, being struck with a small iron rod, yielded a shrill sound. The Egyptians used it in battle instead of a trumpet. It was also used by the priests of Isis at her sacrifices, and the goddess herself was described as holding one in her right hand.

Her angry sistrum—per hypallagen—for the angry goddess with her sistrum.

94. Keep the money, &c.] Juvenal here describes one, who, having money intrusted to him, refuses to deliver it up when called upon, and who is daring enough, not only to deny his ever having received it, but to defy all punishment, and its consequences, so that he may but succeed in his perjury and fraud, and still keep the money in his possession.

95. A phthisic.] (from Gr. φθίσις, a φθίσις, to corrupt) A consumption of the lungs.

— Putrid sores.] Vomicæ—impothumes of a very malignant kind.

— Half a leg.] The other half being amputated, on account of incurable sores, which threatened mortification.

96. Of such consequence.] Tanti—of so much consequence—i. e. as to counterbalance the joy of possessing a large sum of money.

— Ladas.] The name of a famous runner, who won the prize at the Olympic games.

97. The rich gout.] So called, because it usually attacks the rich and luxurious.

Archigene: quid enim velocis gloria plantæ
Præstat, & efuriens Pisææ ramus olivæ?

UT SIT MAGNA, TAMEN CERTE LENTA IRA DEORUM
EST. 100

Si curant igitur cunctos punire nocentes,
Quando ad me venient? sed & exorabile numen

Fortasse experiar: solet his ignoscere. Multi Committunt eadem diverso crimina fato.

Ille crucem pretium sceleris tulit, hic diadema. 105

Sic animum diræ trepidum formidine culpæ
Confirmant. tunc te sacra ad delubra vocantem
Præcedit, trahere imò ultrò, ac vexare paratus.

97. If he does not want Anticyra.] i. e. If he be not mad. Anticyra, an island of the Archipelago, was famous for producing great quantities of the best hellebore, which the ancients esteemed good to purge the head in cases of madness. Whence naviga Anticyram, was as much as to say—you are mad. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 166.

98. Archigenes.] Some famous physician, remarkable, perhaps, for curing madness. See Sat. vi. 235.

— The glory of a swift foot, &c.] What good does the applause got by his swiftness do him? it will not fill his belly.

99. Hungry branch of the Pisæan olive.] Pisa was a district of Elis, in Peloponnesus, in which was Olympia, where the Olympic games were celebrated: the victors in which were crowned with chaplets made of olive-branches, hence called Pisæan.

The hungry branch—i. e. that will afford no food to the gainers of it. See note on l. 93, ad fin.

The speaker here means, that to be sick and rich, is better than to be healthy and poor; that the famous Ladas, unless he were mad, would sooner choose to be laid up with the gout and be rich, than to enjoy all the glory of the Olympic games and be poor.

100. Tho' the anger, &c.] Another flatters himself, that, though punishment may be heavily inflicted some time or other, yet the evil day may be a great way off. See Eccl. viii. 11.

101. If they take care, &c.] q. d. If they do observe the actions of men, and attend to what they do, so as to take order for the punishment of guilt, wherever they find it, yet it may be a great while before it comes to my turn to be punished.

103. Exorable

"Archigenes : for what does the glory of a swift foot
"Avail him, and the hungry branch of the Pifæan olive?"

"THO' THE ANGER OF THE GODS BE GREAT, YET CER-"TAINLY IT IS SLOW. 100

"If they take care therefore to punish all the guilty,
"When will they come to me?—But, perhaps too, the deity
"Exorable I may experience: he useth to forgive these "things.

"Many commit the same crimes with a different fate.

"One has borne the cross as a reward of wickedness, an-
"other a diadem." 105

Thus the mind trembling with the fear of dire guilt
They confirm: then you, calling him to the sacred shrines,
He precedes, even ready of his own accord to draw you,
and to teaze you.

103. Exorable, &c.] It may be I shall escape all punishment; for perhaps I may obtain forgiveness, and find the Deity easy to be intreated.

— He useth, &c.] i. e. Crimes of this sort, which are not committed out of contempt of the Deity, but merely to get a little money, he usually forgives.

104. Different fate.] Another subterfuge of a guilty conscience, is, that though, in some instances, wrong doers are punished grievously, yet in others they succeed so happily as to obtain rewards: so that the event of wickedness is very different to different people.

105. Borne the cross, &c.] The same species of wickedness that has brought one man to the gallows, has exalted another to a throne.

106—7. Thus they confirm.] By all these specious and deceitful reasonings, they cheat themselves into the commission of crimes, and endeavour to silence the remonstrances and terrors of a guilty conscience.

108. He precedes, &c.] Thus confident, the wretch whom you summon to the temple, in order to swear to his innocence, leads the way before you, as if in the utmost haste to purge himself by oath.

— Ready to draw, &c.] He is ready to drag you along by force, and to harass and teaze you to get on faster, in order to bring him to his oath,

Nam cū magna malæ superest audacia causæ,
 Creditur à multis fiducia : mimum agit ille, 110
 Urbani qualem fugitivus scurra Catulli.
 Tu miser exclamas, ut Stentora vincere possis,
 Vel potiùs quantū Gradivus Homericus : audis,
 Jupiter, hæc ? nec labra moves, cū mittere vocem
 Debueras, vel marmoreus, vel aheneus ? aut cur 115
 In carbone tuo chartà pia thura solutà
 Ponimus, & scetum vituli jecur, albaque porci
 Omenta ? ut video, nullum discrimen habendum est
 Effigies inter veltras, statuamque Bathylli.

109. When great impudence, &c.] When a man is impudent enough, however guilty, to set a good face upon the matter, this is mistaken by many for a sign of honest confidence, arising from innocence.

110. He acts the mimic, &c.] Alluding to a play written by one Lutatius Catullus, called the Phasma, or vision (see Sat. viii. 185—6.) in which there was a character of a buffoon, who ran away from his master, after having cheated him, and then vexed, and even provoked him, that he might be brought to swear himself off, cheerfully proposing thus to be perjured. This play is lost by time, so that nothing certain can be said concerning this allusion ; but what is here said (after Holyday) seems probable.

111. Witty Catullus.] Some expound urbani, here, as the cognomen of this Catullus.

112. You, miserable, exclaim—] You, half mad with vexation at finding yourself thus treated, and in amazement at the impudence of such a perjury, break forth aloud.

— Stentor.] A Grecian mentioned by Homer, Il. i. l. 785—6, to have a voice as loud as fifty people together.

113. Homeric Gradivus.] See note, Sat. ii. l. 128. Homer says (Il. i. 860—2.) that when Mars was wounded by Diomedes, he roared so loud that he frightened the Grecians and Trojans, and made a noise as loud as 10,000 men together.

In some such manner as this, wouldst thou, my friend Calvinus, exclaim, and call out to Jupiter.

114. Nor move your lips.] Canst thou be a silent hearer, O Jupiter, of such perjuries as these ? wilt thou not so much as utter a word against such doings, when one should think thou oughtest to threaten vengeance, wert thou even made of marble or brass, like thine images which are among us ?

115. Or

SAT. XIII. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 151

For when great impudence remains to a bad cause,
It is believed confidence by many: he acts a farce, 110
Such as the fugitive buffoon of the witty Catullus.

You miserable exclaim, so as that you might overcome Stentor,

Or rather as much as the Homerican Gradivus: "Do
" you hear,

" O Jupiter, these things? nor move your lips, when you
" ought

" To send forth your voice, whether you are of marble or
" of brass? or why 115

" On thy coal, put we the pious frankincense from the loos'd

" Paper, and the cut liver of a calf, and of an hog

" The white cawl? as I see, there is no difference to be
" reckon'd,

" Between your images, and the statue of Bathyllus."

115. Or why.] Where is the use—to what purpose is it?

116. Put we, &c.] See Sat. xii. l. 89, note.

116—17. From the loos'd paper.] Some think that the offerers used to bring their incense wrapped up in paper, and, coming to the altar, they undid or opened the paper, and poured the incense out of it upon the fire.

But others, by chartâ solutâ (abl. absol.) understand a reference to the custom, mentioned Sat. x. 55. (see note there) of fastening pieces of paper, containing vows, upon the images of the gods, and taking them off when their prayers were granted, after which they offered what they had vowed.

117. The cut liver, &c.] The liver cut out of a calf, and the cawl which covered the inwards of an hog, were usual offerings.

119. The statue of Bathyllus.] A fiddler and a player, whose statue was erected in the temple of Juno, at Samos, by the tyrant Polycrates.—q. d. At this rate, I don't see that there is any difference between thy images, O Jupiter, and those that may be erected in honour of a fiddler.

In this expostulatory exclamation to Jupiter, which the poet makes his friend utter with so much vehemence, there is very keen raillery against the folly and superstition that prevailed at Rome, which Juvenal held in the highest contempt. This almost reminds one of that fine farcism of the prophet Elijah—
1 Kings xviii. 27.

Accipe, quæ contrà valeat solatia ferre, 120

Et qui nec Cynicos, nec Stoïca dogmata legit

A Cynicis tunicâ distantia; non Epicurum

Suspicit exigui lætum plantaribus horti.

Curentur dubii medicis majoribus ægri,

Tu venam vel discipulo committe Philippi. 125

Si nullum in terris tam detestabile factum

Ostendis, taceo; nec pugnis cædere pectus

Te veto, nec planâ faciem contundere palmâ;

Quandoquidem accepto claudenda est janua damno,

Et majore domûs gemitu, majore tumultu 130

120. Hear, &c.] The poet is now taking another ground to console his friend, by representing to him the frequency, not only of the same, but of much greater injuries than what he has suffered; and that he, in being ill used, is only sharing the common lot of mankind, from which he is not to think himself exempt.

— Hear.] Accipe—auribus understood.

121. Neither bath red.] Never hath made these his study.

— The Cynics.] The followers of Diogenes.

— Stoic doctrines.] The doctrines of Zeno and his followers, who were called Stoics, from stoa, a porch, where they taught.

— Differing, &c.] These people differed from each other in their dress, the Cynics wearing no tunic (a sort of waistcoat) under their clokes, as the Stoics did; but both agreed in teaching the contempt of money, and of the change of fortune.

122. Epicurus.] A philosopher of Athens, a temperate and sober man, who lived on bread and water and herbs: he placed man's chief happiness in the pleasure and tranquillity of the mind. He died of the stone at Athens, aged seventy-two. His scholars afterwards sadly perverted his doctrines, by making the pleasures of the body the chief good, and ran into those excesses which brought a great scandal on the sect. Suspicit—lit. looks up to.

124. Dubious sick, &c.] Those who are so ill, that their recovery is doubtful, should be committed to the care of very experienced and able physicians.

So, those who are afflicted with heavy misfortunes, stand in need of the most grave and learned advice.

125. Commit your vein, &c.] A person whose cause of illness is but slight, may trust himself in the hands of a young beginner.

Hear, what consolations on the other hand one may bring, 120
And who neither hath red the Cynics, nor the Stoic doctrines, differing

From the Cynics by a tunic: nor admires Epicurus
Happy in the plants of a small garden.

The dubious sick may be taken care of by greater physicians,
Do you commit your vein even to the disciple of Philip. 125

If you shew no fact in all the earth so detestable,
I am silent: nor do I forbid you to beat your breast
With your fists, nor to bruise your face with your open palm;
Since, loss being received, the gate is to be shut,
And with greater mourning of the house, with a greater tumult, 130

So you, Calvinus, whose loss is but comparatively slight, have no need of Stoics, or Cynics, or of such a one as Epicurus, to console you; I am sufficient for the purpose, though I do not read or study such great philosophers.

125. Philip.] Some surgeon of no great credit or reputation; but even his apprentice might be trusted to advise bleeding, or not, in a slight disorder. So you may safely trust to my advice in your present circumstances, though I am no deep philosopher; a little common sense will serve the turn.

The whole of these two last lines is allegorical; the ideas are taken from bodily disorder, but are to be transferred to the mind.

126. If you shew, &c.] Could you shew no act in all the world so vile as this which has been done towards you, I would say no more—I would freely abandon you to your sorrows, as a most singularly unhappy man.

127. Nor do I, &c.] i. e. Go on, like a man frantic with grief—beat your breast—slap your face till it be black and blue.

129. Since, &c.] In a time of mourning for any great loss, it was usual to shut the doors and windows.

— Loss being received.] A loss of money incurred.—He is here rallying his friend Calvinus.—q. d. Inasmuch as the loss of money is looked upon as the most serious of all losses, doubtless you ought to bewail your misfortune, with every circumstance of the most unfeigned sorrow.

130. Mourning of the house, &c.] i. e. Of the family—for, to be sure, the loss of money is a greater subject of grief, and more lamented than the deaths of relations.

Planguntur nummi, quàm funera : nemo dolorem
 Fingit in hoc casu, vestem diducere summam
 Contentus, vexare oculos humore coacto :
 Ploratur lachrymis amissa pecunia veris.
 Sed si cuncta vides simili fora plena querelâ ; 135
 Si decies lectis diversâ parte tabellis,
 Vana supervacui dicunt chirographa ligni,
 Arguit ipforum quos litera, gemmaque princeps
 Sardonyches, oculis quæ custoditur eburnis :
 Ten', ô delicias, extra communia censes 140

131. Nobody feigns, &c.] The grief for loss of money is very sincere, however feigned it usually is at funerals.

132. Content to sever, &c.] Nobody contents himself with the mere outward shew of grief—such as rending the upper edge of a garment, which was an usual sign of grief.

133. Vex the eyes, &c.] To rub the eyes, in order to squeeze out a few forced tears.

See Terent. Eun. Act. i. Sc. i. where Parmeno is describing the feigned grief of Phædria's mistress, and where this circumstance of dissimulation is finely touched—

Hæc verba unâ meherclè falsâ lacrumulâ,
 Quam, oculos terendo miserè, vix vi expresserit, Restinguet, &c.

So Virg. Æn. ii. l. 196—

Captique dolis lachrymisque coacti.

134. Lost money is deplored, &c.] When we see a man deplored the loss of money, we may believe the sincerity of his tears.

The poet in this, and the preceding lines on this subject, finely satirizes the avarice and selfishness of mankind, as well as their hypocrisy, and all want of real feelings, where self is not immediately concerned.

135. If you see, &c.] q. d. However I might permit you to indulge in sorrow, if no instance of such fraud and villainy had happened to any body but yourself, yet if it be every day's experience, if the courts of justice are filled with complaints of the same kind, why should you give yourself up to grief, as singularly wretched, when what has happened to you is the frequent lot of others?

136. If tablets.] i. e. Deeds or obligations written on tablets. See Sat. ii. l. 58, note.

— Red over, &c.] i. e. Often red over in the hearing of witnesses, as well as of the parties.

Money is bewailed than funerals: nobody feigns grief.

In this case, content to sever the top of the garment,

To vex the eyes with constrained moisture:

Lost money is deplored with true tears.

But if you see all the courts filled with the like complaint, 135

If, tablets being red over ten times, by the different party,

They say the hand-writings of the useless wood are vain,

Whom their own letter convicts, and a principal gem

Of a sardonix, which is kept in ivory boxes.

Think you, O sweet Sir, that out of common things 140

136. By the different party.] This expression is very obscure, and does not appear to me to have been satisfactorily elucidated by commentators. Some read diversâ in parte, and explain it to mean, that the deeds had been red over in different places—variis in locis, says the Delphin interpretation. However, after much consideration, I rather approve of reading diversâ parte, by the different (i. e. the opposite) party.—Pars means, sometimes, a side or party in contention. AINSW. In this view, it exaggerates the impudence and villainy of a man who denied his deed or obligation, seeing that his adversary, the creditor, having frequently red over the deed, could not be mistaken as to its contents, any more than the debtor, who had signed and sealed it, as well as heard it red over.

137. They say.] i. e. The fraudulent debtors say, that the hand-writings contained in the bonds are false and void.

Supervacuum means, superfluous—serving to no purpose or use.—Supervacui ligni, i. e. of the inscribed wooden tablets, which are of no use, though the obligation be written on them.

q. d. Notwithstanding the hand-writing appears against them, signed and sealed by themselves, and that before witnesses, yet they declare that it is all false, a mere deceit, and of no obligation whatsoever—they plead, non est factum, as we say.

138. Whom their own letter convicts.] Whose own hand-writing proves it to be their own deed.

—A principal gem, &c.] Their seal cut upon a sardonix of great value, with which they sealed the deed.

139 Which is kept, &c.] Kept in splendid cases of ivory, perhaps one within another, for its greater security. By this circumstance, the poet seems to hint, that the vile practice which he mentions, was by no means confined to the lower sort of people, but had made its way among the rich and great.

140. O sweet Sir.] Delicias—hominis understood. Comp. Sat. vi. 47. An ironical apostrophe to his friend.

Delicias

Ponendum? Quî tu gallinæ filius albæ, Nos viles pulli nati infelicibus ovis?
 Rem pateris modicam, & mediocri bile ferendam,
 Si flectas oculos majora ad crimina: Confer
 Conductum latronem, incendia sulphure cœpta, 145
 Atque dolo, primos cùm janua colligit ignes:
 Confer & hos, veteris qui tollunt grandia templi
 Pocula adorandæ rubiginis, & populorum
 Dona, vel antiquo positas à rege coronas.
 Hæc ibi si non sunt, minor extat sacrilegus, qui 150

Deliciæ is often used to denote a darling, a minion, in which a person delights; here delicias might be rendered choice, favourite, i. e. of fortune—as if exempted from the common accidents of life—as if put or placed out of their reach.

141. How.] Why—by what means—how can you make it out?

— The offspring of a white hen.] The colour of white was deemed lucky. This expression appears to have been proverbial in Juvenal's time, to denote a man that is born to be happy and fortunate.

Some suppose the original of this saying to be the story told by Suetonius in his life of Galba, where he mentions an eagle, which soaring over the head of Livia, a little after her marriage with Augustus, let fall into her lap a white hen, with a laurel-branch in her mouth; which hen, being preserved, became so fruitful, that the place where this happened was called Villa ad Gallinas.

But the poet saying nothing of fruitfulness, but of the colour only, it is rather to be supposed that Erasmus is right, in attributing this proverb to the notion which the Romans had of a white colour, that it denoted luck or happiness, as dies albi, and albo lapillo notati, and the like.

142. Unfortunate eggs.] The infelicibus ovis, put here in opposition to the white hen, seems to imply the eggs of some birds of unhappy omen, as crows, ravens, &c. figuratively to denote those who are born to be unfortunate.

Sæpe sinistra cavâ prædixit ab ilice Cornix.

VIRG. Ecl. i. 18; and ix. 15.

143. With moderate choler, &c.] i. e. Moderate wrath, anger, resentment, when you consider how much greater injuries others suffer from greater crimes.

SAT. XIII. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 157

You are to be put? How are you the offspring of a white hen,

We, vile chickens hatched from unfortunate eggs?

You suffer a moderate matter, and to be borne with moderate choler,

If you bend your eyes to greater crimes : compare

The hired thief, burnings begun with sulphur, 145

And by deceit, when the gate collects the first fires :

Compare also these, who take away the large cups

Of an old temple, of venerable rust, and the gifts

Of the people, or crowns placed by an antient king.

If these are not there, there stands forth one less sacrilegi-ous, who 150

144. Compare.] Consider in a comparative view.

145. Hired thief.] Or cut-throat, who is hired for the horrid purpose of assassination.

— Burnings begun with sulphur.] Which is here put, by synec. for all sort of combustible matter with which incendiaries fire houses.

146. By deceit.] In a secret manner, by artfully laying the destructive materials, so as not to be discovered till too late to prevent the mischief.

— Collects the first fires.] So as to prevent those who are in the house from getting out, and those who are without from getting in, to afford any assistance. It is not improbable that the poet here glances at the monstrous act of Nero, who sat Rome on fire.

147. Large cups, &c.] Who are guilty of sacrilege, in stealing the sacred vessels which have been for ages in some antique temple, and which are venerable from the rust which they have contracted by time.

148—9. The gifts of the people.] Rich and magnificent offerings, given to some shrine by a whole people together, in honour of the god that presided there.

149. Crowns placed, &c.] As by Romulus and other kings, whose crowns, in honour of their memory, were hung up in temples of the gods.

150. If these are not there.] If it so happen that there be no such valuable relics as these now mentioned, yet some petty sacrilegious thief will deface and rob the statues of the gods.

Radat inaurati femur Herculis, & faciem ipsam Neptuni, qui bracteolam de Castore ducat.
 An dubitet, solitus totum conflare Tonantem?
 Confer & artifices, mercatoremque veneni,
 Et deducendum corio bovis in mare, cum quo 155
 Clauditur adversis innoxia simia fatis.
 Hæc quota pars scelerum, quæ custos Gallicus urbis
 Usque à Lucifero, donec lux occidat, audit?
 Humani generis mores tibi nôsse volenti
 Sufficit una domus; paucos consume dies, & 160
 Dicere te miserum, postquàm illinc veneris, aude.
 Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? Aut quis
 In Meroë crasso majorem infante mamillam?
 Cærule quis stupuit Germani lumina, flavam

151. Scrape the thigh, &c.] To get a little gold from it.
 151—2. Face of Neptune.] Some image of Neptune, the beard whereof was of gold.

152. Draw off the leaf-gold, &c.] Peel it off, in order to steal it, from the image of Castor:—there were great treasures in his temple. See Sat. xiv. l. 260.

153. Will he hesitate.] At such comparatively small matters as these, who could steal a whole statue of Jupiter, and then melt it down—and who can make a practice of such a thing? A man who accustoms himself to greater crimes, can't be supposed to hesitate about committing less.

154. Contrivers, and merchant of poison.] Those who make, and those who sell poisonous compositions, for the purposes of sorcery and witchcraft, or for the killing persons in a secret and clandestine manner. See Hor. Sat. ix. Lib. i. 31; and Epod.
 ix. l. 61.

155. Launched into the sea, &c.] Parricides were put into a sack made of an ox's hide, together with an ape, a cock, a serpent, and a dog, and thrown into the sea. See Sat. viii. 214.
 The fate of these poor innocent animals is very cruel, they having done no wrong.—Deducendum. Met. See Virg. G. i. 255.

157. Keeper of the city.] Rutilius Gallicus was appointed, under Domitian, præfectus urbis, who had cognizance of capital offences, and sat every day on criminal causes.

158. From the morning.] Lucifero.—The planet Venus, when seen at day-break, is called Lucifer—i. e. the bringer of light. See Sat. viii. 12.

Lucifer ortus erat—

Ov. Met. iv. 664.

It is not to be supposed that the præfectus urbis literally sat from morning to night every day, but that he was continually, as the phrase among us imports, hearing causes, in which the most atrocious crimes were discovered and punished.

160. One house suffices.] q. d. If you desire to be let into a true history of human wickedness, an attendance at the house of Gallicus alone will be sufficient for your purpose.

— Spend a few days, &c.] Attend there for a few days, and when you come away, dare, if you can, to call yourself unhappy, after hearing what you have heard at the house of Gallicus. Domus is a very general word, and need not be restricted here to signify the private house of the judge, but may be understood of the court or place where he sat to hear causes.

162. Swollen throat, &c.] The inhabitants about the Alps have generally great swellings about their throats, occasioned, as some suppose, by drinking snow water. The French call these protuberances on the outside of the throat—goitres.

163. Meroë.] An island surrounded by the Nile—see Sat. vi. 527.—The women of this island are said to have breasts of an enormous size. Our poet is hardly to be understood literally.

164. Blue eyes, &c.] Tacit. de Mor. Germ. says, that the Germans

Cæsariem, & madido torquentem cornua cirro? 165
 Nempè quòd hæc illis natura est omnibus una.
 Ad subitas Thracum volucres, nubemque sonoram
 Pygmæus parvis currit bellator in armis :
 Mox impar hosti, raptusque per aëra curvis
 Unguibus à sævâ fertur græ : Si videas hoc 170
 Gentibus in nostris, risu quaterere : Sed illic, Quanquàm eadem assiduè spectentur prælia, ridet
 Nemo, ubi tota cohors pede non est altior uno.
 Nullane perjuri capitis, fraudisque nefandæ

Germans have truces & cæruleos oculos, et comas rutilas—fierce and blue eyes, and red hair.

165. Twisting his curls.] Cornu—lit. an horn; but is used in many senses to express things that bear a resemblance to an horn—as here, the Germans twisted their hair in such a manner, as that the curls stood up and looked like horns.

— A wet lock.] Cirrus signifies a curled lock of hair.—
 The Germans used to wet their locks with ointment of some kind, perhaps that they might the more easily take, and remain in, the shape in which the fashion was to put them—something like our use of pomatum; or the ointment which they used might be some perfume. Comp. Hor. Lib. ii. Ode vii. l. 7, 8.

166. Because, &c.] Nobody would be surprized at seeing a German as above mentioned, and for this reason, because all the Germans do the same, it is the one universal fashion among them.—Natura sometimes signifies, a way or method.

167. Sudden birds, &c.] A flight of cranes coming unexpectedly from Strymon, a river of Thrace.

Strymonix græes.—See Virg. G. i. 120; Æn. x. 265.

— Sonorous cloud.] The cranes are birds of passage, and fly in great numbers when they change their climate, which they were supposed to do when the winter set in in Thrace;
 they made a great noise as they flew. See Æn. x. 265—6.

168. Pygmean warrior, &c.] The Pygmies (from πύγμα, the fist, or a measure of space from the elbow to the hand—a cubit) were a race of people in Thrace, which were said to be only three inches high. At new. Juvenal says, a foot, l. 173.
 They were said always to be at war with the cranes.

— Little arms.] His diminutive weapons.

169. The enemy.] The cranes.

171. In our nations, &c.] In our part of the world, if an instance of this sort were to happen, it would appear highly ridiculous; to see a little man fighting a crane, and then flown away with

Hair, and twisting his curls with a wet lock? 165

Because indeed this one nature is to them all.

At the sudden birds of the Thracians, and the sonorous cloud,

The Pygmean warrior runs in his little arms,

Soon unequal to the enemy, and seized, thro' the air, with crooked

Talons, he is carried by a cruel crane: if you could see this 170

In our nations, you would be shook with laughter: but there

Tho' the same battles may be seen constantly, nobody

Laughs, when the whole cohort is not higher than one foot.

" Shall there be no punishment of a perjured head, with in the talons of the bird, would make you shake your sides with laughter, from the singularity of such a sight.

172. The same battles, &c.] In that part of the world, there being no singularity or novelty in the matter, though the same thing happens constantly, nobody is seen to laugh, however ridiculous it may be to see an army of people, not one of which is above a foot high.

The poet means to infer from all this, that it is the singularity and novelty of events which make them wondered at: hence his friend Calvinus is so amazed and grieved that he should be defrauded, looking upon it as peculiar to him; whereas, if he would look at what is going forward in the world, particularly in courts of civil and criminal judicature, he would see nothing to be surprised at, with respect to his own case, any more than he would be surprised, if he went among the Germans, to see blue eyes, and red hair, or locks curled and wetted with some ointment, seeing they all appear alike. Or if he were to go among the Pygmies, he would see nobody laugh at their battles with the cranes, which are constantly happening, and at the diminu-tive size of the Pygmy warriors, which is alike in all.

174. No punishment, &c.] Well, but, says Calvinus, though you observe that I am not to be surprised at what I have met with, because it is so frequent, is such a matter to be entirely unnoticed, and such an offender not to be punished?

— A perjured head.] A perjured person.—Capitis, per synec. stands here for the whole man.

So Hor. Lib. i. Ode xxiv. l. 2.

Tam chari capitis.

175. Wicked fraud?] In taking my money to keep for me, and then denying that he ever had it.

— “ Suppose, &c.” Juvenal answers—Suppose the man who has injured you hurried instantly away to prison, and loaded with fetters heavier than ordinary—graviore catenâ.

176. Be kill'd, &c.] Be put to death by all the tortures we could invent (and the most bitter anger could desire no more)—what then?

177. That loss.] i. e. Which you complain of.

— Remains.] Is still the same.

178. The deposit, &c.] The money which you deposited in his hands would not be the safer—i. e. at all the more secure.

179. “ The least blood, &c.” True, replies Calvinus, but I should enjoy my revenge—the least drop of blood from his mangled body would give me such comfort as to be enviable; for revenge affords a pleasure sweeter than life itself.

181. Truly this, &c.] Truly, says Juvenal, ignorant and foolish people think so.—q. d. This is the sentiment of one who is void of all knowledge of true philosophy—indocti.

— Whose breasts, &c.] Præcordia signifies, literally, the parts about the heart, which is supposed to be the seat of the passions and affections; here it may stand for the passions themselves, which, says the poet, are set on fire, sometimes for no cause at all, sometimes from the most trivial causes, in silly people.

183. However small, &c.] Any trifling thing is sufficient to put them into a passion—but it is not so with the wise.

184. Chrysippus will not say, &c.] A famous Stoic philosopher,

SAT. XIII. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 163

"The deposit be safe to you:" "but from his maimed body

"The least blood will give an enviable consolation.

"But revenge is a good more pleasant than life itself." 180

Truly this is of the unlearned, whose breasts you may see

Burning, sometimes from none, or from slight causes:

However small the occasion may be, it is sufficient for anger.

Chrysis will not say the same, nor the mild disposition.

mettus, 185

Who would not, amidst cruel chains, give a part of

The received hemlock to his accuser. Happy wisdom, pher, scholar to Zeno, who taught the government of the passions to be a chief good.

185. Thales.] A Milesian, one of the seven wise men of Greece. He held that injuries were to be contemned, and was not himself easily provoked to anger.

— The old man.] Socrates.

— Neighbour to sweet Hymettus.] Hymettus, a mountain in Attica, famous for excellent honey, hence called dulcis Hy- mettus. See Hor. L'ib. ii. Ode vi. l. 14, 15. This mountain was not far from Athens, where Socrates lived, and where he was put to death.

186. Who would not, &c.] It was a maxim of Socrates, that he who did an injury was more to be pitied than he who suffered it. He was accused of contemning the gods of Athens, and, for this, was condemned to die, by drinking the juice of hemlock; which he did with circumstances of calmness and fortitude, as well as of forgiveness of his accusers, that brought tears from all that were present with him in the prison during the sad scene.

An old scholiast has observed on this passage, as indeed some others have done, that one of his accusers, Melitus, was cast into prison with him, and asking Socrates to give him some of the poison, that he might drink it, Socrates refused it.

187. Received hemlock.] Which he had received from the executioner,

187. Happy wisdom.] The poet here means the teachings of the moral philosophers, some of which held, that, even in torments, a wise man was happy.

189. First teaching what is right, &c.] To know what is right is first necessary, in order to do it—this, therefore, is the foundation of moral philosophy, in order to strip the mind of error, and the life of vicious actions.

Vitæ philosophia dux, virtutis indagatrix, expultrixque vitiorum. Cic. Tusc. v. 2.

“Philosophy is the guide of life, the searcher-out of virtue, “the expeller of vice.”

191. Thus conclude.] i. e. Conclude, without any farther reasoning, that the above observation, viz. that revenge is the pleasure of weak minds, is true, because it is so often found to be so in the weaker sex.

Perfius uses the verb colligo in the sense of conclude, or infer—mendose colligis, you conclude falsely. Sat. v. l. 85.

193. To have escaped, &c.] Though no outward punishment should await these evil-doers, and you may suppose them to have escaped quite free, yet their very souls, conscious of dreadful crimes, are all astonishment—their guilty conscience smiting them with silent, but severe, reproof.

195. Their conscience.] i. e. Their conscience the executioner, shaking its secret scourge with terror over them.

A metaphor, taken from the whipping criminals, whose ter-

The Pythian prophets answer'd a certain Spartan, rors are excited at seeing the executioner's scourge lifted up and shaken over them.

Public whipping was a common punishment among the Romans for the lower sort of people. See Hor. Epod. iv. l. 11.

196. Veheement punishment, &c.] The poet here means, that the torments of a wounded conscience are less tolerable than those of bodily punishment.—Comp. Prov. xviii. 14.

197. Severe Cæditius.] A very cruel judge in the days of Vitellius; or, according to some, in the days of Nero.

— Rhadamanthus.] One of the judges of hell. See Sat. i. l. 10, note.

198. Their own witness, &c.] Continually bearing about with them the testimony of an evil conscience.

199. Pythian prophets.] The priests of Apollo (called Pythius, from his slaying the serpent Python) by whom Apollo gave answers at his oracle of Delphos.

The story alluded to is told by Herodotus, of one Glaucus, a Spartan, with whom a Milesian, in confidence of his honesty, had left a sum of money in trust. Glaucus afterwards denied having received the money, when it was demanded by the sons of the Milesian, and sent them away without it: yet he was not quite satisfied in himself, and went to the oracle, to know whether he should persist in denying it, or not. He was answered, that if he forswore the money, he might escape for a time; but for his vile intention, he and all his family should be destroyed. Upon this, Glaucus sent for the Milesians, and paid the whole.

sum. But what the oracle foretold came to pass, for he and all his kindred were afterwards extirpated.

200. Time to come.] Though he might escape for the present, yet, at a future time, he should not go without punishment.

201. A deposit.] Of money committed to his trust.

— By swearing.] By perjury—jure jurando. Tmesis.

202. He asked, &c.] In hopes that he might get such an answer as would quiet his mind, and determine him to keep the money.

203. Would advise, &c.] Would persuade him to the fact—i. e. to retain the deposit, &c.

204. From fear, not, &c.] More from a principle of fear of the consequences of keeping it, than an honest desire of doing right.

205. The voice of the shrine.] Adytum signifies the most secret and sacred place of the temple, from whence the oracles were supposed to be delivered.

— Worthy the temple, &c.] It was reckoned highly for the reputation of the temple, when the things there foretold came to pass : on account of which, these oracles were usually delivered in equivocal terms, so that they might be supposed to tell truth, on whichever side the event turned out.

207. Deducted from a long race.] Longâ gente, from a long train of ancestors—all that were related to him, however distantly, were cut off.

208. These

208. These punishments, &c.] Thus was the mere intention of doing ill most justly punished.

210. Hath the guilt, &c.] Is as really guilty as if he had accomplished it. In this, and in many other passages, one would almost think Juvenal was acquainted with something above heathenism. Comp. Prov. xxiv. 8, 9; and Matt. v. 28.

— “ Tell me, &c.] A question asked by Calvinus, on hearing what Juvenal had said above.—Tell me, says Calvinus, if what you say be true, that the very design to do evil makes a person guilty of what he designed to do, what would be the case of his actually accomplishing what he intended, as my false friend has done?

211. “ Perpetual anxiety.] Juvenal answers the question, by setting forth, in very striking colours, the anguish of a wounded conscience.—First, he would be under continual anxiety.

— The time of the table.] Even at his meals—his convivial hours.

212. With jaws dry, &c.] His mouth hot and parched, like one in a fever.

213. Difficult food increasing.] This circumstance is very natural—

Exspuit : Albani veteris pretiosa senectus Displicet : ostendas melius, densissima ruga 215

tural—the uneasiness of this wretch's mind occasions the symptoms of a fever ; one of which is a dryness of the mouth and throat, owing to the want of a due secretion of the saliva, by the glands appropriated for that purpose. The great use of this secretion, which we call saliva, or spittle, is, in masticating and diluting the food, and making the first digestion thereof ; also to lubricate the throat and œsophagus, or gullet, in order to facilitate deglutition, which, by these means, in healthy persons, is attended with ease and pleasure.

But the direct contrary is the case, where the mouth and throat are quite dry, as in fevers—the food is chewed with difficulty and disgust, and cannot be swallowed without uneasiness and loathing, and may well be called difficilis cibus in both these respects. Wanting also the saliva to moisten it, and make it into a sort of paste for deglutition, it breaks into pieces between the teeth, and taking up more room than when in one mass, it fills the mouth as if it had increased in quantity, and is attended with a nausea, or loathing, which still increases the uneasiness of the sensation.

213—14. Spits out his wine.] He can't relish it, his mouth being out of taste, and therefore spits it out as something nauseous.

214. Albanian.] See Sat. v. l. 33, note. This was reckoned the finest and best wine in all Italy, especially when old. See Hor. Lib. iv. Ode xi. l. 1, 2.

215. Show him better.] If you could set even better wine than this before him, he could not relish it.

— The thickest wrinkle, &c.] His forehead would contract into wrinkles without end, as if they were occasioned by his being offered four Falernan wine.

Densissima is here used, as in Sat. i. 120, to denote a vast number ; as we say a thick crowd, where vast numbers of people are collected together,

Falernan

"His wine : the precious old age of old Albanian

"Will displease: if you shew him better, the thickest

"Is gathered on his forehead, as drawn by four Falernan.

"In the night, if haply care hath indulged a short sleep,

"And his limbs tumbled over the whole bed, now are quiet,

"Immediately the temple, and the altars of the violated Deity,

"And (what urges his mind with especial pains) 220

"Thee he sees in his sleep : thy sacred image, and bigger "Than human, disturbs him fearful, and compels him to "confess."

"There are they who tremble, and turn pale at all lightnings

Falernan wine was in high repute among the Romans when it was of the best sort ; but there was a kind of coarse, sour wine, which came from Falernus, a mountain of Campania, which, when drank, would occasion sickness and vomiting. See Sat. vi. l. 427, note ; and Sat. vi. l. 429.

218. His limbs tumbled over, &c.] Tumbling and tossing from one side of the bed to the other, through the uneasiness of his mind. See Sat. iii. 280, and note ; and AINSW. Verbo, N° 2.

219. The temple—the altars, &c.] He is haunted with dreadful dreams, and seems to see the temple in which, and the altar upon which, he perjured himself, and thus profaned and violated the majesty of the Deity.

220. What urges his mind, &c.] But that which occasions him more misery than all the rest (see AINSW. Sudor ; and Sat. i. 167.) is, that he fancies he beholds the man whom he has injured, appearing (as aggrandized by his fears) greater than a human form. The ancients had much superstition on the subject of apparitions, and always held them sacred ; and (as fear magnifies its objects) they always were supposed to appear greater than the life. Hence Juvenal says, sacra & major imago. Comp. Virg. Æn. ii. l. 772—3.

222. Compels him to confess.] i. e. The villainy which he has been guilty of—a confession of this is wrung from him by the terrors which he undergoes ; he can no longer keep the secret within his breast.

223. All lightnings, &c.] The poet proceeds in his description of the miserable state of the wicked, and here represents them as filled with horror by thunder and lightning, and dreading the consequences.

Cùm tonat; exanimes primo quoque murmure cœli :
 Non quasi fortuitus, nec ventorum rabie, sed 225
 Iratus cadat in terras, & vindicet ignis.

224. First murmur, &c.] They are almoſt dead with fear, on hearing the firſt rumbling in the ſky.

225. Not as if, &c.] They do not look upon it as happening fortuitouſly, by mere chance or accident, without any direction or intervention of the gods, like the Epicureans. See Hor. Sat. v. Lib. i. l. 101—3.

— Rage of winds.] Or from the violence of the winds, occaſioning a collision of the clouds, and ſo producing the lightning, as the philoſophers thought, who treated on the phyſical cauſes of lightning, as Pliny and Seneca.

226. Fire may fall, &c.] The wretch thinks that the ſhaſhes which he ſees and dreads, will not confine their fury to the ſkies, but, armed with divine vengeance, may fall upon the earth, and deſtroy the guilty.

227. “That did no harm.”] i. e. That laſt tempeſt did no miſchief; it is now over and harmleſs:—“So far is well,” thinks the unhappy wretch.

— “The next tempeſt, &c.”] Though they eſcape the firſt ſtorm, yet they dread the next ſtill more, imagining that they have only had a reſpite from puniſhment, and therefore that the next will certainly deſtroy them.

228. As if deſerr’d, &c.] As if delayed by one fair day, on purpoſe, afterwards, to fall the heavier.

This paſſage of Juvenal reminds one of that wonderfully fine ſpeech, on a ſimilar ſubject, which our great and inimitable poet, Shakeſpeare, has put into the mouth of King Lear, when turned out by his cruel and ungrateful daughters, and, on a deſolate and barren heath, is in the miſt of a ſtorm of thunder and lightning.

LEAR, Act iii. Sc. ii.

229. Pain of the side, &c.] The poet seems, here, to mean a pleurisy, or pleuretic fever, a painful and dangerous distemper.

— A watchful fever.] i. e. A fever which will not let them sleep, or take their rest.

230. Begun to suffer, &c.] On the first attack of such a disorder, they believe themselves doomed to suffer the wrath of an offended Deity, of which their illness seems to them an earnest.

232. Stones and darts.] These were weapons of war among the antients; when they attacked a place, they threw, from engines for that purpose, huge stones to batter down the wall, and darts to annoy the besieged.

Here the poet uses the words in a metaphorical sense, to denote the apprehension of the sick criminal, who thinks himself, as it were, besieged by an offended Deity, who employs the pleurisy and fever, as his artillery, to destroy the guilty wretch.

232. To engage a bleating sheep, &c.] Or lamb—pecus may signify either.—It was usual for persons in danger, or in sickness, to engage by vow some offering to the gods, on their deliverance, or recovery; but the guilty wretches here mentioned, are supposed to be in a state of utter despair, so that they dare dare not so much as hope for recovery, and therefore have no courage to address any vows to the gods.

233. Comb of a cock, &c.] So far from promising a cock to Æsculapius, they have not the courage to vow even a cock's comb, as a sacrifice to their household gods.

234. Allowed the guilty, &c.] Such guilty wretches can be allowed no hope whatever—their own consciences tell them as much.

235. Is not more worthy, &c.] i. e. Does not more deserve to live than they.

236. Fickle and changeable.] i. e. Wavering and uncertain, at first; before they commit crimes, they are irresolute, and doubting whether they shall or not, and often change their mind, which is in a fluctuating state.

237. Remains constancy.] When they have once engaged in evil actions, they become resolute.

— What is right, &c.] After the crime is perpetrated, they begin to reflect on what they have done—they are forcibly stricken with the difference between right and wrong, insomuch that they feel, for a while, a remorse of conscience; but notwithstanding this—

239. Nature recurs, &c.] Their evil nature will return to its corrupt principles, and silence all remorse; fixed and unchangeable in this respect, it may be said—Naturam expellas furcâ tamen usque recurrit. Hor. Lib. i. Epist. x. l. 24.

241. Has laid down to himself, &c.] What wicked man ever contented himself with one crime, or could say to his propensity to wickedness, "hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther," when every crime he commits hardens him the more, and plunges him still deeper?—See Sat. ii. l. 83, note.

241. When recover'd, &c.] No man ever yet recovered a sense of shame, who had once lost it.

242. Worn forehead, &c.] Attritus signifies rubbed or worn away, as marble, or metals, in polishing, where an hard and polished surface remains ; so a wicked man, by frequent and continual crimes, grows hardened against all impressions of shame, of which the forehead is often represented as the seat. See Jer. iii. 3. latter part.

243. Who is there, &c.] Who ever contented himself with sinning but once, and stopped at the first fault ?

244. Our perfidious wretch, &c.] Noster perfidus, says Juvenal, meaning the villain who had cheated Calvinus, and then perjured himself. As if the poet had said—Don't be so uneasy, Calvinus, at the loss of your money, or so anxious about revenging yourself upon the wretch who has injured you ; have a little patience, he won't stop here, he'll go on from bad to worse, till you will find him sufficiently punished, and yourself amply avenged.

244—5. Into a snare.] He'll do something or other which will

will send him to gaol, and load him with fetters. Or—he will walk into a snare (comp. Job xviii. 8—10.) and be intangled in his own devices.

245. Suffer the hook, &c.] The uncus was a drag, or hook, by which the bodies of malefactors were dragged about the streets after execution. See Sat. x. l. 66.

But, by this line, it should seem as if some instrument of this sort was made use of, either for torture, or closer confinement in the dungeon.

246. Rock of the Ægean Sea.] Or, if he should escape the gallows, that he will be banished to some rocky, barren island in the Ægean Sea, where he will lead a miserable life. Perhaps the island Scirphus is here meant. See Sat. vi. 563.

— Or the rocks frequent, &c.] The rocky islands of the Cyclades (see Sat. vi. 562, note) to which numbers were banished, and frequently, either by the tyranny of the emperor, or through their own crimes, persons of high rank.

247. You will rejoice, &c.] You, Calvinus, will at last triumph over the villain that has wronged you, when you see the bitter sufferings, which await him, fall upon him.

248. His

"A snare, and will suffer the hook of a dark prison, 245
 "Or the rock of the Ægean Sea, or the rocks frequent

 "no one of
 "The gods, is either deaf, or a Tiresias."

248. His hated name.] Which will not be mentioned, but with the utmost detestation and abhorrence.

— At length—confess.] However, in time past, you may have doubted of it, you will in the end joyfully own—

248—9. That no one of the gods, &c.] Whose province it is to punish crimes, is either deaf, so as not to hear such perjury, or blind, so as not to see every circumstance of such a transaction, and to punish it accordingly. Comp. l. 112—19.

249. Tiresias.] A blind soothsayer of Thebes, fabled to be stricken blind by Juno, for his decision in a dispute between her and her husband, in favour of the latter, who in requital gave him the gift of prophecy.

END OF THE THIRTEENTH SATIRE.

S A T I R A XIV.

A R G U M E N T.

This Satire is levelled at the bad examples which Parents set their Children, and shews the serious consequences of such examples, in helping to contaminate the morals of the rising generation, as we are apt, by nature, rather to receive ill impressions than good, and are, besides, more pliant in our Line 1. Fuscine.] A friend of Juvenal's, to whom this Satire is addressed.

— Worthy of unfavourable report.] Which deserve to be ill spoken of, to be esteemed scandalous.

The word sinistra, here, is metaphorical, taken from the Roman superstition, with regard to any thing of the ominous kind, which appeared on the left hand; they reckoned it unlucky and unfavourable. See Sat. x. l. 129, where the word is applied, as here, in a metaphorical sense.

2. Fixing a stain, &c.] A metaphor, taken from the idea of clean and neat garments being soiled, or spotted, with filth thrown upon them, the marks of which are not easily got out. So these things of evil report fix a spot, or stain, on the most splendid character, rank, or fortune—all which, probably, the poet means by nitidis rebus.

3. Which parents, &c.] The things worthy of evil report, which are afterwards particularized, are matters which parents exhibit to their children by example, and deliver to them by precept. Comp. l. 9.

4. If the destructive dis pleases, &c.] If the father be fond of playing at dice.

4. Wearing

younger than in our riper years. From hence he descends to a Satire on Avarice, which he esteems to be of worse example than any other of the vices which he mentions before; and concludes with limiting our desires within reasonable bounds.

THERE are many things, Fuscinus, worthy of unfavourable report,
 And fixing a stain which will stick upon splendid things,
 Which parents themselves shew, and deliver to their children.
 If the destructive die pleases the old man, the heir wearing the bulla
 Will play too, and moves the same weapons in his little dice-box. 5
 Nor does the youth allow any relation to hope better of him,

4. Wearing the bulla, &c.] His son, when a mere child, will imitate his example.—For the bulla, see Sat. xiii. l. 33, note.

5. The same weapons, &c.] Arma, literally, denotes all kind of warlike arms and armour; and, by met. all manner of tools and implements, for all arts, mysteries, occupations, and diversions. AINSW. The word is peculiarly proper to express dice, and other implements of gaming, wherewith the gamesters attack each other, each with an intent to ruin and destroy the opponent.—See Sat. i. 92, note.

— Little dice-box.] Master, being too young to play with a large dice-box, not being able to shake and manage it, has a small one made for him, that he may begin the science as early as possible.—See AINSW. Fritillus.

6. Nor does the youth allow, &c.] The poet, having mentioned the bringing up children to be gamesters, here proceeds

Concedet juvenis, qui radere tubera terræ, Boletum condire, & eodem jure natantes
 Mergere ficedulas didicit, nebulone parente,
 Et canâ monstrante gulâ. cùm septimus ævus 10
 Transierit puero, nondum omni dente renato, Barbatos licèt admoveas mille inde magistros,
 Hinc totidem, cupiet lauto cœnare paratu
 Semper, & à magnâ non degenerare culinâ.
 Mitem animum, & mores, modicis erroribus æquos 15 to those who are early initiated into the science of gluttony. Such give very little room to their family to hope that they will turn out better than the former.

7. To peel the funguses of the earth.] Tuber (from tumeo, to swell or puff up) signifies what we call a puff, which grows in the ground like a mushroom—a toad-stool. But I apprehend that any of the fungous productions of the earth may be signified by tuber; and, in this place, we are to understand, perhaps, truffles, or some other food of the kind, which were reckoned delicious. Sat. v. l. 116, note.

— To peel.] Or scrape off the coat, or skin, with which they are covered.

8. A mushroom.] The boletus was reckoned the best sort of mushroom. Comp. Sat. v. l. 147. See AINSW. Condio.

9. Beccaficos.] Ficedulas—little birds which feed on figs, now called beccaficos, or fig-peckers; they are to this day esteemed a great dainty.

It was reckoned a piece of high luxury to have these birds dressed, and served up to table, in the same sauce, or pickle, with funguses of various kinds.

— A prodigal parent.] Nebulo signifies an unthrift, a vain prodigal; and is most probably used here in this sense. See AINSW. Nebulo 2.

10. A grey throat, &c.] Gula is, literally, the throat or gullet; but, by met. may signify a glutton, who thinks of nothing but his gullet. So γαστήρ, the belly, is used to denote a glutton; and the apostle's quotation from the Cretan poet, Tim. i. 12. γαστήρες ἀργαί, instead of slow bellies, which is nonsense, should be rendered lazy gluttons, which is the undoubted sense of the phrase.

Canâ gulâ, here, then, may be rendered an hoary glutton—i. e. the old epicure, his father, setting the example, and shewing him the art of luxurious cookery.

Who has learnt to peel the funguses of the earth,
 'To season a mushroom, and, swimming in the same sauce,
 'To immerse Beccaficos, a prodigal parent,
 And a grey throat shewing him. When the seventh year 10
 Has passed over the boy, all his teeth not as yet renewed, Tho' you should place a thousand bearded masters there,
 Here as many, he would desire always to sup with a Sumptuous preparation, and not to degenerate from a great kitchen.

Does Rutilus teach a meek mind and manners, kind to small errors, 15

10. The seventh year, &c.] When he is turned of seven years of age, a time when the second set of teeth, after shedding the first, is not completed, and a time of life the most flexible and docile.

12. Tho' you should place, &c.] Though a thousand of the gravest and most learned tutors were placed on each side of him, so as to pour their instructions into both his ears at the same time, yet they would avail nothing at all towards reclaiming him.—q. d. The boy having gotten such an early taste for gluttony, will never get rid of it, by any pains which can be taken with him for that purpose.

The philosophers and learned teachers wore beards, and were therefore called Barbati. They thought it suited best with the gravity of their appearance.

Perf. Sat. iv. l. 1, calls Socrates—barbatum magistrum. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 35, and note.

13. He would desire, &c.] He would never get rid of his inclination to gluttony.

13—14. With a sumptuous preparation.] With a number of the most delicious provisions, dressed most luxuriously, and served up in the most sumptuous manner.

14. Not to degenerate, &c.] Either in principle or practice, from the profuse luxury of his father's ample kitchen.

So true is that of Hor. Epist. Lib. i. Epist. ii. l. 68—9.

Quo semel imbuta est recens, servabit odorem Testa diu.

15. Rutilus.] The name of some master, who was of a very cruel disposition towards his servants.

—Kind to small errors.] Making allowance for, and excusing small faults.

16. And the souls of slaves, &c.] Does he think that the bodies of slaves consist of the same materials, and that their souls are made up of the same elements as ours, who are their masters? Does he suppose them to be of the same flesh and blood, and to have reasonable souls as well as himself? Sat. vi. 221.

18. Or does he teach to be cruel.] Instead of setting an example of meekness, gentleness, and forbearance, does he not teach his children to be savage and cruel, by the treatment which he gives his slaves?

18—19. In the bitter sound of stripes.] He takes a pleasure in hearing the sound of those bitter stripes, with which he punishes his slaves.

19. Compares no Siren, &c.] The song of a Siren would not, in his opinion, be so delightful to his ears, as the crack of the whips off his slaves backs.

20. The Antiphates and Polyphemus, &c.] Antiphates was a king of a savage people near Formiæ, in Italy, who were eaters of man's flesh.

Polyphemus the Cyclops lived on the same diet. See Virg. Æn. iii. 620, & seq.

Rutilus is here likened to these two monsters of cruelty, inasmuch as that he was the terror of his whole family, which is the sense of laris in this place.

21. Tên happy.] It was a matter of joy to him.

— As often as any one.] i. e. Of his slaves.

— The tormentor, &c.] Comp. Sat. vi. 479, and note.

22. Is burnt, &c.] Burnt with an hot iron on his flesh, for some petty theft, as of two towels or napkins. These the Romans wiped with after bathing.

23. What can be advise, &c.] What can a man, who is himself

SAT. XIV. JUVENAL'S SATIRES, 181

And the souls of slaves, and their bodies, does he think
To consist of our matter, and of equal elements?—
Or does he teach to be cruel, who delights in the bitter Sound of stripes, and compares no Siren to whips,
The Antiphates and Polyphemus of his trembling household— 20

Then happy, as often as any one, the tormentor being called,
Is burnt with an hot iron on account of two napkins?
What can he who is glad at the noise of a chain advise to a youth,

Whom branded slaves, a rustic prison, wonderfully Delights?—Do you expect that the daughter of Larga should not be 25

An adulteress, who never could say over her mother's gallants,

So quickly, nor could join them together with so much speed, self so barbarous, as to be affected with the highest pleasure at hearing the rattling of fetters, when put on the legs or bodies of his slaves—what can such a father persuade his son to, whom he has taught so ill by his example?

24. Branded slaves—a rustic prison.] Ergastulum—lit. signifies a workhouse, a house of correction, where they confined and punished their slaves, and made them work. Sometimes (as here, and Sat. vi. 150.) it means a slave.—Inscriptus -a-
-um, signifies marked, branded; inscripta ergastula, branded slaves—comp. l. 22, note.—q. d. Whom the sight of slaves branded with hot irons, kept in a workhouse in the country, where they are in fetters (l. 23.) and which is therefore to be looked on as a country-gaol, affects with wonderful delight.
We may suppose the ergastula something like our Bridewells.

25. Larga.] Some famous lady of that day—here put for all such characters.

—Should not be, &c.] When she has the constant bad example of her mother before her eyes. Comp. Sat. vi. 239, 240.

26. Who never, &c.] Who could never repeat the names of all her mother's gallants, though she uttered them as fast as possibly she could, without often taking breath before she got to the end of the list, so great was the number. Comp. Sat. x. 223—4.

Ut non ter decies respiret? conscia matri
 Virgo fuit: ceras nunc hâc dictante pusillas
 Implet, & ad mœchum dat eisdem ferre cinædis. 30
 Sic natura jubet: Velociùs & citiùs nos
 Corruptunt vitiorum exempla domestica, magnis
 Cùm subeunt animos authoribus. Unus & alter Forsitan hæc spernant juvenes, quibus arte benignâ,
 Et meliore luto finxit præcordia Titan. 31
 Sed reliquos fugienda patrum vestigia ducunt;
 Et monstrata diu veteris trahit orbita culpæ.
 Abstineas igitur damnandis: hujus enim vel
 Una potens ratio est, ne crimina nostra sequantur

28. Privy, &c.] She was a witness of all her mother's lewd proceedings, and was privy to them; which is the meaning of conscia in this place. See Sat. iii. l. 49.

29. Now.] i. e. Now she is grown something bigger, she does as her mother did.

— She dictating.] The mother instructing, and dictating what she shall say.

— Little tablets.] Cera signifies wax—but as they wrote on thin wooden tablets smeared over with wax, ceras, per. met. means the tablets or letters themselves. See Sat. i. l. 63.

Some understand by ceras pusillas, small tablets, as best adapted to the size of her hand, and more proper for her age, than large ones. As the boy (l. 5.) had a little dice-box to teach him gaming, so this girl begins with a little tablet, in order to initiate her into the science of intrigue. But, perhaps, by pusillas ceras the poet means what the French would call petits billets-doux.

30. She fills.] i. e. Fills with writing.

— The same pimps, &c.] Cinædis is a word of a detestable meaning; but here cinædis seems to denote pimps, or people who go between the parties in an intrigue.

The daughter employs the same messengers that her mother did, to carry her little love-letters.

31. So nature commands, &c.] Thus nature orders it, and therefore it naturally happens, that examples of vice, set by those of our own family, corrupt the soonest.

32. When they possess minds, &c.] When they insinuate themselves into the mind, under the influence of those who have a right to exercise authority over us. See ANSW. AUTHOR, N° 6.

33. One or two.] Unus & alter—here and there one, as we say,

As that she must not take breath thirty times ? privy to her mother

Was the virgin : now, she dictating, little tablets
She fills, and gives them to the same pimps to carry to the gallant. 30

So nature commands ; more swiftly and speedily do domestic Examples of vices corrupt us, when they possess minds
From those that have great influence. Perhaps one or two Young men may despise these things, for whom, by a benign art,

And with better clay, Titan has formed their breasts. 35
But the footsteps of their fathers which are to be avoided, lead the rest,

And the path of old wickedness, long shewn, draws them.
Abstain therefore from things which are to be condemned :
for of this at least

There is one pow'rful reason, lest those who are begotten by us

say, may be found as exceptions, and who may reject, with due contempt, their parents vices, but then they must be differently formed from the generality.

34. By a benign art, &c.] Prometheus, one of the Titans, was feigned, by the poets, to have formed men of clay, and put life into them by fire stolen from heaven.

The poet here says, that, if one or two young men are found, who reject their father's bad example, it must be owing to the peculiar favour of Prometheus, who, by a kind exertion of his art, formed their bodies, and particularly the parts about the heart (præcordia) of better materials than those which he employed in the formation of others.

36. Footsteps, &c.] As for the common run of young men, they are led, by the bad example of their fathers, to tread in their fathers steps, which ought to be avoided.

37. Path of old wickedness, &c.] And the beaten track of wickedness, constantly before their eyes, draws them into the same crimes.

38. Abstain therefore, &c.] Refrain therefore from ill actions—at least we should do this, if not for our own sakes, yet for the sake of our children, that they may not be led to follow

Ex nobis geniti: quoniam dociles imitandis 40
 Turpibus & pravis omnes sumus; & Catilinam Quocunque in populo videas, quocunque sub axe:
 Sed nec Brutus erit, Bruti nec avunculus usquam.
 Nil dictu foedum, visuque hæc limina tangat,
 Intra quæ puer est. procul hinc, procul inde puellæ 45
 Lenonum, & cantus pernoctantis parasiti.
 Maxima debetur puero reverentia. Si quid Turpe paras, ne tu pueri contempseris annos:
 Sed peccaturus obsistat tibi filius infans.
 Nam si quid dignum Cenforis fecerit irâ, 50 (Quandoquidem similem tibi se non corpore tantum, Nec vultu dederit, morum quoque filius) & cùm

our vicious examples, and to commit the same crimes which they have seen in us.

40. In imitating, &c.] Such is the condition of human nature, that we are all more prone to evil than to good, and, for this reason, we are easily taught to imitate the vices of others.

41. A Catiline, &c.] See Sat. viii. 231. Vicious characters are easily to be met with, go where you may.

43. Brutus.] M. Brutus, one of the most virtuous of the Romans, and the great assertor of public liberty.

— Uncle of Brutus.] Cato of Utica, who was the brother of Servilia, the mother of Brutus, a man of severe virtue.

So prone is human nature to evil, so inclined to follow bad example, that a virtuous character, like Brutus or Cato, is hardly to be found any where, while profligate and debauched characters, like Catiline, abound all the world over—this would not be so much the case, if parents were more careful about the examples which they set their children.

44. Filthy.] Indecent, obscene.

— Should touch, &c.] Should approach those doors, where there are children, lest they be corrupted. Therefore—

45. Far from hence, &c.] Hence far away, begone; a form of speech made use of at religious solemnities, in order to hinder the approach of the profane. So Horace, Lib. iii. Ode i. l. 1, when he calls himself musarum sacerdos, says, Odi profanum vulgus & arceo.

Virg. Æn. vi. 258—9, makes the Sibyl say—

—Procul O procul este profani

—Totoque abstinete loco.

But let your infant son hinder you about to sin.

45—6. Girls of bawds.] The common prostitutes, who are kept by common panders, or pimps, for lewd purposes.

46. The nightly parasite.] Pernocians signifies tarrying, or sitting up all night.—The parasites, who frequently attended at the tables of great men, used to divert them with lewd and obscene songs, and for this purpose would sit up all night long.

47. Greatest reverence, &c.] People should keep the strictest guard over their words and actions, in the presence of boys; they cannot be under too much awe, nor shew too great a reverence for decency, when in their presence.

47—8. You go about, &c.] If you intend, or purpose, or set about, to do what is wrong, don't say, "There's nobody here" but my young son, I don't mind him, and he is too young to "mind me:"—rather say, "My little boy is here, I will not hurt his mind by making him a witness of what I purposed to do, therefore I will not do it before him."

50. Of the censor.] The censor of good manners, or morum judex, was an officer of considerable power in Rome, before whom offenders against the peace and good manners were carried and censured. Sat. iv. l. 12.

q. d. Now, if, in after times, your son should be taken before the censor, for some crime cognizable and punishable by him.

52. Shew himself, &c.] (For he will exhibit a likeness to his father, not in person, or face only, but in his moral behaviour and

Omnia deterius tua per vestigia peccet, and conduct; therefore, if you set him a bad example, you must not wonder that he follows it, and appears his father's own son in mind as well as in body.)

53. Offend the worse, &c.] And it is most probable, that following your steps has made him do worse than he otherwise would.

54. You will, &c.] You will call him to a severe account. Nimirum here is to be understood like our English—forsooth.

— And chastise, &c.] You will be very loud and bitter in your reproaches of his bad conduct, and even have thoughts of disinheriting him, by changing your last will. See Sat. ii. 58, tabulas.

56. Whence, &c.] With what confidence can you assume the countenance and authority of a father, so as freely to use the liberty of parental reproof? We may suppose sumas to be understood in this line.

57. When, &c.] When you, at an advanced age, do worse than the youth with whom you are so angry.

— This head, &c.] When that brainless head of yours may, for some time, have wanted the cupping-glass to set it right—i. e. when you have for a long time been acting as if you were mad.

58. Ventose cupping-glass.] Cucurbita signifies a gourd, which, when divided in half, and scooped hollow, might, perhaps, among the antients, be used as a cupping instrument. In after times they made their cupping instruments of brass, or horn (as now they are made of glass) and applied them to the head to relieve pains there, but particularly to mad people. The epithet of ventosa, which signifies windy, full of wind, alludes to the nature of their operation, which is performed by rarifying the air which is within them, by the application of fire, on which the blood is forced from the scarified skin into the cupping-

He may offend the worse, by all your footsteps,
 You will, forsooth, chide, and chastise with harsh Clamour, and after these, will prepare to change your will. 55
 Whence assume you the front, and liberty of a parent,
 When, an old man, you can do worse things, and this head, Void of brain, long since, the ventose cupping-glass may seek?

A guest being to come, none of your people will be idle.

 "Let one wipe the smooth silver, another the rough vessels:"
 The voice of the master, earnest, and holding a rod, blusters.

ping-glass, by the pressure of the outward air; so that the air may be called the chief agent in this operation.—The operation of cupping on the head in phrenses is very ancient.

59. A guest, &c.] When you expect a friend to make you a visit, you set all hands to work, in order to prepare your house for his reception.

60. Sweep the pavement, &c.] "Sweep (say you to your servants) the floors clean—wipe the dust from all the pillars."

The Roman floors were either laid with stone, or made of a sort of mortar, or stucco, composed of shells reduced to powder, and mixed in a due consistency with water; this, when dry, was very hard and smooth. Hence, Britannicus observes, pavementum was called ostraceum, or testaceum.—These floors are common in Italy to this day.

The Romans were very fond of pillars in their buildings, particularly in their rooms of state and entertainment. See Sat. vii. 182—3. The architraves, and other ornamental parts of pillars, are very apt to gather dust.

61. Dry spider, &c.] The spiders, which have been there so long as to be dead and dried up, sweep them, and all their cobwebs, down.

62. Smooth silver.] The unwrought plate which is polished and smooth.

—The rough vessels.] The wrought plate, which is rough and uneven, by reason of the imbossed figures upon it, which stand out of its surface. See Sat. i. 76.—So Æn. ix. 263.

Bina dabo argento perfecta atque aspera signis
 Pocula—

63. Holding a rod.] To keep them all to their work, on pain of being scourged.

63. Bluf.

Ergo miser trepidas, ne stercore sœda canino
 Atria displiceant oculis venientis amici ? 65
 Ne perfusa luto sit porticus : & tamen uno
 Semodio scobis hæc emundet servulus unus :
 Illud non agitas, ut sanctam filius omni
 Aspiciat sinè labe domum, vitioque carentem ?
 Gratum est, quòd patriæ civem populoque dedisti, 70
 Si facis, ut patriæ sit idoneus, utilis agris,
 Utilis & bellorum, & pacis rebus agendis :
 Plurimum enim intererit, quibus artibus, & quibus hunc tu
 Moribus instituas. Serpente ciconia pullos Nutrit, & inventâ per devia rura lacertâ : 75

63. Bluffers.] He is very loud and earnest in his directions to get things in order.

64. Therefore, &c.] Canst thou, wretch that thou art, be so solicitous to prevent all displeasure to thy guest, by his seeing what may be offensive about thine house, either within or without, and, for this purpose, art thou so over-anxious and earnest, when a very little trouble might suffice for this, and, at the same time, take no pains to prevent any moral filth or turpitude from being seen in your house by your own son ? This is the substance of the poet's argument.

65. Thy courts.] Atrium signifies a court-yard, a court before an house, a hall, a place where they used to dine. ANSW. All these may be meant, in this place, by the plur. atria; for, to all these places their favourite dogs might have access, and, of course, might daub them.

66. The porch, &c.] A sort of gallery, with pillars, at the door (ad portam) of the house; or a place where they used to walk, and so liable to be dirty.

— Servant boy.] Servulus (dim. of servus) a servant lad.

67. Saw-dust, &c.] Scobs signifies any manner of powder, or dust, that cometh of sawing, filing, or boring. Probably the Romans sprinkled over the floors of their porticos with saw-dust, as we do our kitchens and lower parts of the house with sand, to give them a clean appearance, and to hinder the dirt of people's shoes from sticking to the floor. See Holyday, note 3, on this Satire, who observes, that Heliogabalus was said to strew his porticus, or gallery, with the dust of gold and silver.

68. Manage it, &c.] viz. To keep your house sacred to virtue and good example, and free from all vicious practices, that your son may not be corrupted by seeing them.

Therefore, wretch, dost thou tremble, lest, foul with canine dung,

Thy courts should displease the eyes of a coming friend? 65
Lest the porch should be overspread with mud? and yet one servant boy,

With one half bushel of saw-dust, can cleanse these :
Dost thou not manage it, that thy son should see Thine house, sacred without all spot, and having no vice?
It is acceptable, that you have given a citizen to your country and people, 70

If you make him, that he may be meet for his country, useful in the fields,

Useful in managing affairs both of war and peace :
For it will be of the greatest consequence, in what arts, and with what morals

You may train him up. With a serpent a stork nourishes
Her young, and with a lizard found in the devious fields : 75

70. Acceptable, &c.] i. e. To the public, that, by begetting a son, you have added to the country a subject, and to Rome a citizen.

71. If you make him, &c.] If you so educate and form him, that he may be an useful member of society.

— In the fields.] Well skilled in agriculture.

72. In managing affairs, &c.] Capable of transacting the business of a soldier, or that of a lawyer or senator. The opposition of belli & pacis, like arma & togæ, in cedant arma togæ, seems to carry this meaning.

So Holyd.—the helmet or the gown.

The old Romans were careful so to breed up their sons, that afterwards they might be useful to their country in peace or war, or ploughing the ground. J. DRYDEN, junior.

73. In what arts, &c.] So as to make him useful to the public.

— What morals, &c.] So as to regulate his conduct, not only as to his private behaviour, but as to his demeanour in any public office which he may be called to.

74. A stork nourishes, &c.] i. e. Feeds her young ones with snakes and lizards.

75. Devious fields.] Deviu (ex de and via—quasi a reſſa viâ remotum) signifies out of the way, or road.

Devia

Illi eadem sumptis quærunt animalia pennis.

Devia rura may be understood of the remote parts of the country, where serpents and lizards are usually found.

76. Take their wings.] i. e. The young storks, when able to fly and provide for themselves, will seek the same animals for food, with which they were fed by the old ones in the nest.

77. With cattle, &c.] The vulture feeds her young—jumento—with the flesh of dead cattle, and of dead dogs.

— Relics from crosses.] i. e. Feeds on the remains of the bodies of malefactors that were left exposed on crosses, or gibbets, and brings part of the carcase to her nest—l. 78.

79. Hence, &c.] From thus being supplied with such sort of food by the old one, the young vulture, when she is grown up to be a great bird, feeds upon the same.

80. When now, &c.] She feeds herself and her young in the same manner, whenever she has a nest of her own, in some tree which she appropriates for building in.

81. Handmaids of Jove.] Eagles. See Hor. Lib. iv. Ode iv. l. 1, & seq. where the eagle is called ministrum fulminis alitem, because supposed to carry Jove's thunder. See FRANCIS, note there.

81—2. Noble birds, &c.] Not only eagles, but the falcons of various kinds, hunt hares and kids, and having caught them, carry them to their nests to feed their young with.

83. Thence, &c.] i. e. From being fed with such sort of food when young.

— The mature progeny.] The young ones, when grown up, and full fledged.

They, when they take their wings, seek the same animals.
The vulture with cattle, and with dogs, and with relics from crosses,

Hastens to her young, and brings part of a dead body.
Hence is the food also of a great vulture, and of one feeding:
Herself, when now she makes nests in her own tree. 80
But the hare or the kid, the handmaids of Jove, and the noble Birds, hunt in the forest, hence prey is put

In their nest: but, thence, the mature progeny, when
It has raised itself, hunger stimulating, hastens to that Prey, which it had first tasted the egg being broken. 85

Centronius was a builder, and now on the crooked
Shore of Caieta, now on the highest summit of Tibur,
Now in the Prænestine mountains, was preparing the high Tops of villas, with Grecian, and with marble sought Afar off, exceeding the temple of Fortune and of Hercules: 99

84. Raised itself, &c.] Upon its wings, and takes its flight.

— Hunger stimulating.] When sharpened by hunger.

84—5. Hastens to that prey.] To the same sort of food.

85. Which it had first tasted, &c.] Which it had been used to from the time it was first hatched—rupto ovo, from the broken egg—from its very egg-shell, as we say.

86. Centronius.] A famous extravagant architect, who, with his son (who took after him) built away all his estate, and had so many palaces at last, that he was too poor to live in any of them.

87. Caieta.] A sea-port in Campania, not far from Baix, built in memory of Caieta, nurse to Æneas. See Æn. vii. l. 1—4.
The shore was here remarkably sinuous and crooked.

— Summit of Tibur.] See Sat. iii. 192, note.

88. Prænestine mountains.] On the mountains near Præneste, a city of Italy, about twenty miles from Rome.

— Was preparing.] Planning and building, thus preparing them for habitation:

88—9. The high tops, &c.] Magnificent and lofty country-houses.

89. With Grecian, &c.] Finished in the most superb taste with Grecian and other kinds of foreign marble.

90. Temple of Fortune.] There was one at Rome built of
the

Ut spado vincebat Capitolia substra Posides.

Dum sic ergo habitat Centronius, imminuit rem,

Fregit opes, nec parva tamen mensura reliquæ

Partis erat: totam hanc turbavit filius amens,

Dum meliore novas attollit marmore villas.

Quidam fortiti metuentem Sabbata patrem,

Nil præter nubes, & cœli numen adorant;

Nec distare putant humanâ carne suillam,

Quâ pater abstinuit; mox & præputia ponunt:

the finest marble by Nero—but here is meant that at Prænestæ.

90. Of Hercules.] At Tibur, where there was a very great library.

91. Eunuch Posides, &c.] A freedman and favourite of Claudius Cæsar, who was possessed of immense riches; he built on the shore at Baia some baths which were very magnificent, and called, after him, Posidianæ.

— Our capitals.] Of which there were several, besides that at Rome, as at Capua, Pompeia, and other places. But the poet means particularly the capitol at Rome, which, after having been burnt, was rebuilt and beautified most magnificently by Domitian.

92. While thus, &c.] While he thus builds and inhabits such expensive and magnificent houses, he outruns his income.

93. Nor yet, &c.] Nevertheless, though he lessened his fortune, yet there was no small part of it left.

94. His mad son, &c.] His son, who, from the example of his father, had contracted a sort of madness for expensive building, confounded the remaining part of his father's fortune, when it came to him, after his father's death.

95. Raised up new villas, &c.] Endeavouring to excel his father, and to build at a still greater expence, with more costly materials.

This instance of Centronius and his son is here given as a proof of the poet's argument, that children will follow the vices and follies of parents, and perhaps even exceed them (comp. l. 59.); therefore parents should be very careful of the example which they set their children.

96. Some chance, &c.] Sortiti—i. e. it falls to the lot of some.

— Fears the Sabbaths.] Not only reverences the seventh day, but the other Jewish feasts, which were called Sabbaths.

The poet having shewn, that children follow the example of

As the eunuch Pofides out-did our capitols.

While thus, therefore, Centronius dwells, he diminished his estate,

He impaired his wealth, nor yet was the measure of the remaining

Part small: his mad son confounded all this,

While he raised up new villas with better marble. 95

Some chance to have a father who fears the Sabbaths, They adore nothing beside the clouds, and the Deity of heaven:

Nor do they think swine's flesh to be different from human,
From which the father abstain'd; and soon they lay aside their foreskins,

their parents in vice and folly, here shews, that in religious matters also children are led by their parents example.

97. Beside the clouds.] Because the Jews did not worship images, but looked toward heaven when they prayed, they were charged with worshipping the clouds, the heathen having no notion but of worshipping some visible object.

— The Deity of heaven.] Juvenal, though he was wise enough to laugh at his own country gods, yet had not any notion of the ONE TRUE GOD, which makes him ridicule the Jewish worship.

However, I doubt much, whether, by numen cœli, in this place, we are not to suppose Juvenal as representing the Jews to worship the material heaven, "the blue ætherial sky," (as Mr. Addison phrases it in his translation of the 19th Psalm) imagining that they made a deity of it, as he supposed they did of the clouds—this I think the rather, as it stands here joined with nubes, and was likewise a visible object. See Tacitus, Hist. v. initio.

As for the God of Heaven, he was to Juvenal, as to the Athenians, ἀγνός θεός (see Acts xvii. 23.) utterly unknown; and therefore the poet could not mean him by numen cœli.—"After the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God."
1 Cor. i. 21.

98. Swine's flesh different from human.] They think it as abominable to eat the one as the other. Here he ignorantly ridicules their observance of that law, Lev. xi. 7, &c.

99. The father, &c.] He treats it as a matter of mere tradition, as if the son only did it, because his father did it before him.

Romanas autem soliti contemnere leges, 100
 Judaicum ediscunt, & servant, ac metuunt jus, Tradidit arcano quodcunque volumine Moses :
 Non monstrare vias, eadem nisi sacra colenti ;
 Quæsitum ad fontem solos deducere verpos.
 Sed pater in causâ, cui septima quæque fuit lux 105
 Ignava, & partem vitæ non attigit ullam.

Sponte tamen juvenes imitantur cætera : solam
 Inviti quoque avaritiam exercere jubentur.
 Fallit enim vitium specie virtutis, & umbrâ,

99. Soon they lay aside, &c.] Here he ridicules the rite of circumcision, which was performed on the eighth day after their birth, according to Gen. xvii. 10, & seq.

100. Used to despise, &c.] It being their wonted custom and practice to hold the laws of Rome, relative to the worship of the gods in particular, in the highest contempt. See Exod. xxiii. 24.

101. They learn.] From their childhood. Ediscunt—learn by heart.

— And keep.] Observe.

— And fear.] And reverence—

102. Whatsoever Moses, &c.] i. e. Whatsoever it be that Moses, &c.—From this passage it appears, that Moses was known and acknowledged, by the heathen, to be the lawgiver of the Jews.

— Secret volume.] By this is meant the Pentateuch (so called from πέντε, five, and τευχος, a book or volume) or five books of Moses. A copy of this was kept, as it is to this day, in every synagogue, locked up in a press, or chest (arcâ), and never exposed to sight, unless when brought out to be read at the time of worship in the synagogue, and then (as now) it was returned to its place, and again locked up. This is probably alluded to by Juvenal's epithet of arcano, from arca—as Romanus, from Roma. See ΔΙΚΣW. Arcanus -a -um.—Volumine, from volvo, to roll, denotes that the book of the law was rolled, not folded, up. See Sat. x. 126, note.

103. Not to shew the ways, &c.] They were forbidden certain connections with the heathen—but when the poet represents them so monstrously uncharitable, as not to shew a stranger the way to a place which he was enquiring after, unless he were a Jew, he may be supposed to speak from prejudice and misinformation. So in the next line—

104. To lead, &c.] He supposes, that, if a man, who was not a Jew, were ever so thirsty, and asked the way to some spring

But used to despise the Roman laws, 100

They learn, and keep, and fear the Jewish law,

Whatsoever Moses hath delivered in the secret volume :

Not to shew the ways, unless to one observing the same rites,

To lead the circumcised only to a sought-for fountain ;

But the father is in fault, to whom every seventh day
was 105

Idle, and he did not meddle with any part of life.

Young men, nevertheless, imitate the rest of their own accord ; only

Avarice they are commanded to exercise against their wills ;

For vice deceives under the appearance and shadow of virtue, to quench his thirst, they would sooner let him perish than direct him to it. But no such thing was taught by Moses. See Exod. xxii. 21 ; and ch. xxiii. 9.

Verpos, like Horace's apella, is a word of contempt.

105. The father, &c.] Who, as the poet would be understood, set them the example.

— Every seventh day, &c.] Throughout the year this was observed as a day of rest, the other sabbaths at their stated times. The poet ignorantly imputes this merely to an idle practice, which was handed down from father to son, not knowing the design and importance of the divine command.

106. Meddle, &c.] i. e. He refrained from all business, even such as related to the necessities of common life. The Jews carried this to a superstitious height—they even condemned works of necessity and charity, if done on the Sabbath. See John vii. 23. They also declared self-defence to be unlawful on the Sabbath-day. See Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. x. p. 272.

107. Young men, &c.] The poet now begins on the subject of avarice, in order to shew how this also is communicated from father to son : but here he makes a distinction. As to other vices, says he, youth want no force to be put upon them to incline them to imitation ; whereas, this of avarice, being rather against their natural bent towards prodigality, requires some pains to be taken, in order to instil it into their minds.

— Therest.] The other vices which have been mentioned.

108. Commanded, &c.] They have much pains taken with them to force them, as it were, into it, against their natural inclinations.

109. Vice deceives, &c.] They are deceived at first, by being taught to look upon that as virtuous, from its appearance,

Cùm sit triste habitu, vultuque & veste severum. 110
 Nec dubiè tanquam frugi laudatur avarus,
 Tanquam parvus homo, & rerum tutela suarum
 Certa magis, quàm si fortunas servet easdem Hesperidum serpens, aut Ponticus : adde quòd hunc, de Quo loquor, egregium populus putat, atque verendum 115
 Artificem : quippe his crescunt patrimonia fabris.
 Sed crescunt quocunque modo, majoraque fiunt Incude assiduâ, semperque ardente camino.

which in truth, in its real nature and design, is vicious. Nothing is more common than for vice to be concealed under the garb of virtue, as in the instance which the poet is about to mention. In this sense it may be said—Decipimur specie rekti. Hor. De Art. l. 25.

110. Sad in habit, &c.] The poet, in this line, in which he is describing vice, wearing the garb, and putting on the semblance, of wisdom and virtue, has probably in his eye the hypocrites, whom he so severely lashes at the beginning of the Second Satire. See Sat. ii. l. 1—20.

Habitu, here, means outward carriage, demeanour, manner. Sad—triste—grave, pensive, demure.

— Severe in countenance, &c.] A severity of countenance, and a negligence in dress, were supposed characteristic of wisdom and virtue, and were therefore in high esteem among the philosophers, and those who would be thought wiser and better than others. Hence, in order to deceive, these were assumed by vicious people. See Matt. vi. 16.

111. Doubtfully praised, &c.] Nobody doubts his sincerity, or that he is other than his appearance bespeaks him, viz. a frugal man, and careful of his affairs, which is certainly a laudable character.

Sic timidus se cautum vocat, fordidus parcum. SEN.

113. More certain, &c.] At the same time he is acting from no better principle, than that of the most sordid avarice, and takes care to hoard up and secure his money-bags in such a manner, as that they are safer than if guarded by the dragon which watched the garden of the Hesperides, the daughters of Atlas, from whence, notwithstanding, Hercules stole the golden apples; or by the dragon, which guarded the golden fleece at Colchos, in Pontus, from whence, notwithstanding, it was stolen by Jason.

114. Add.] We may also add to this account of the character

SAT. XIV. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 197

When it is sad in habit, and severe in countenance and drefs. 110

Nor is the miser doubtfully praised as frugal,
As a thrifty man, and a safeguard of his own affairs,
More certain, than, if those same fortunes, the serpent
Of the Hesperides or of Pontus, should keep. Add, that This man, of whom I speak, the people think an excellent, and venerable 115

Artist, for to these workmen patrimonies increase :
But they increase by whatsoever means, and become greater
By the assiduous anvil, and the forge always burning.

ter here spoken of, that he is in high estimation with the ge-nerality of people, who always judge of a man by what he is worth.

At bona pars hominum, decepta cupidine falsa, Nil satis est, inquit, quia tanti quantum habeas, sis.
HOR. Lib. i. Sat. i. l. 61—2.

“ Some self-deceiv’d, who think their lust of gold “ Is but a love of fame, this-maxim hold—
“ No fortune’s large enough, since others rate
“ Our worth proportion’d to a large estate.” FRANCIS.

115. They think him, &c.] They reckon this man, who has been the fabricator of his own fortune to so large an amount, an excellent workman in his way, and to be highly revered.

116. To these workmen, &c.] Fabris, here, is metaphorical, and is applied to these fabricators of wealth for themselves, because those who coined or made money for the public were called fabri, or monetæ fabricatores. Faber usually denotes a smith—
i. e. a workman in iron and other hard materials, a forger, a hammerer : so these misers, who were continually at work to increase their wealth, might be said to forge and hammer out a fortune for themselves, and in this sense might be called fabri.
To such as these, says the poet, riches increase.

117. By whatsoever means.] They are not very scrupulous or nice, as to the means of increasing their store, whether by right or wrong.

118. By the assiduous anvil, and the forge, &c.] The poet still continues his metaphor. As smiths, by continual beating their iron on the anvil, and having the forge always heated, fabricate and complete a great deal of work ; so these misers are always forging and fashioning something or other to increase

Et pater ergo animi felices credit avaros,
 Qui miratur opes, qui nulla exempla beati 120
 Pauperis esse putat; juvenes hortatur, ut illam
 Ire viam pergant, & eidem incumbere sectæ.
 Sunt quædam vitiorum elementa: his protinus illos
 Imbuat, & cogit minimas edificere fordes.
 Mox acquirendi docet infatigabile votum: 125
 Servorum ventres modio castigat iniquo, Ipse quoque esuriens: neque enim omnia sustinet unquam their wealth. Their incessant toil and labour may be compared to working at the anvil, and the burning desire of their minds to the lighted forge. Camino, here, is to be understood of the forge or furnace in which the iron is heated.

119. The father therefore, &c.] Seeing these men abound in wealth, and not recollecting what pains it cost them, both of body and mind, to acquire it, thinking the rich are the only happy people, and that a poor man must be miserable—

121. Exhorts his young men.] His sons that are growing up.

122. To go that way.] To tread in the steps of these money-getting people.

— Apply earnestly, &c.] Incumbo signifies to apply with earnestness and diligence to any thing. The father here recommends it to his sons, to apply themselves diligently to the practices of these people, whom the poet humourously styles a sect—as if they were a sect of philosophers, to which the word properly belongs. Those who joined in following the doctrines of Plato, were said to be of the Platonic sect—so secta Socratica.—Secta comes from sequor, to follow.

123. Certain elements, &c.] Certain rudiments or beginnings.—The father does not all at once bid his sons to be covetous, but insinuates into their minds, by little and little, sordid principles. This he does as soon as they are capable of receiving them, which I take to be the meaning of protinus here.—Imbuo signifies to season meat, or the like; so, by metaph. to season the mind—also to furnish, or store.

124. Compels them to learn, &c.] From his example, little paltry acts of meanness and avarice—minimas fordes.

125. By-and-by.] As they grow up, he opens his grand plan to them; and as they have been taught to be mean and stingy in lesser matters, he now instructs them how to thrive, by applying the same principles to the science of getting money by low and illiberal means.

— Insatiable wish.] A desire that can never be satisfied—such

And the father therefore believes the covetous happy of mind,
Who admires wealth, who thinks that there are no examples 120

Of an happy poor man; he exhorts his young men, that they May persist to go that way, and apply earnestly to the same sect.

There are certain elements of vices; with these he immediately seasons

Them, and compels them to learn the most trifling stinginess.
By-and-by he teaches an insatiable wish of acquiring: 125

He also hung'ring: for neither does he ever bear such is the inordinate love of money. *Amor habendi. VIRG.

Æn. viii. l. 327.*

126. He chastises, &c.] The poet in this, and in some of the following lines, particularizes certain instances of those minimæ sordes, which he had hinted at l. 124, and which the father is supposed to set an example of to his sons, in order to season and prepare their minds for greater acts of sordidness and avarice.

First, Juvenal takes notice of the way in which the father treats his servants. He pinches their bellies, by withholding from them their due allowance of food, by giving them short measure, which is implied by iniquo modio. The Romans measured out the food which they gave their slaves; this was so much a month, and therefore called demensum, from mensis—or rather, perhaps, from demetior—whence part. demensus -a -um.

We find this word in Ter. Phorm. Act i. Sc. i. l. 9. where Davus is representing Geta, as having saved something out of his allowance, as a present for the bride of his master's son.

Quod ille unciatim vix de demenso suo, Suum defraudans genium, comparat miser.

Geta had saved some of his corn, of which the slaves had so many measures every month, and turned it into money. Modium was a measure of about a peck and an half. ARNEW.

127. He also hung'ring.] Half starving himself at the same time.

— Neither does he, &c.] He does not suffer, or permit, all the pieces of bread, which are so stale as to be blue with mouldiness, and musty with being hoarded up, to be eaten up at once, but makes them serve again and again.

Mucida cœrulei panis consumere frustra,

 Sed quò divitias hæc per tormenta coactas ? 135
 Cùm furor haud dubius, cùm sit manifesta phrenesis, Ut locuples moriaris, egentì vivere fato ?

129. The bafh, &c.] Minutal—a dish made with herbs and meat, and other things chopped together—from minuo, to diminish, or make a thing less.

— Of yesterday.] Which had been dressed the day before, and now served up again. This he will still keep, though in the month of September, a time of year when, from the autumnal damps, victuals soon grew putrid. The blasts of the south-wind at that time were particularly insalubrious. See Sat. vi. 516, note.

130. Also to defer, &c.] Who accustoms himself to keep for a second meal.

131. The bean.] Conchis.—See Sat. iii. 293, note.

— Sealed up.] Put into some vessel, the cover or mouth of which was sealed up close with the master's seal, to prevent the servants getting at it. Or perhaps into some cupboard, the door of which had the master's seal upon it.

131—2. Part of a summer fish.] Lacerti æstivi.—What fish the lacertus was, I do not any where find with certainty. AINSWORTH calls it a kind of cheap fish usually salted. This, mentioned here, is called a summer-fish ; I suppose, because caught in the summer-time ; and for this reason, no doubt, not very likely to keep long sweet.

132. With half a stinking bad.] See Sat. iv. 33 ; and AINSW. Silurus. Lit. and with an half and putrid silurus.

133. To shut up.] Includere—i. e. to include in the same sealed vessel.—The infinitive includere, like the servare, l. 129, and the non differre, l. 130, is governed by the solitus, l. 129.

— Number'd threads, &c.] Sectivi porri.—In Sat. iii. 293—4, Juvenal calls it sectile porrum. See there.—There were two different species of the leek ; one sort was called sectum, sectile, and sectivum—the other capitatum ; the former of which was reckoned the worst. See Plin. Lib. xix. c. vi.

From the bottom of a leek there are fibres which hang downwards,

To consume all the musty pieces of blue bread,
 Who is used to keep the hash of yesterday in the midst of September; also to defer, to the time of another supper, 130
 The bean, sealed up with part of a summer
 Fish, or with half a stinking shad,
 And to shut up the number'd threads of a sective leek:
 Any one invited from a bridge to these, would refuse.
 But for what end are riches gather'd by these torments, 135
 Since it is an undoubted madness, since it is a manifest frenzy,
 That you may die rich, to live with a needy fate?

wards, when the leek is taken out of the ground, which the poet here calls fila, or threads, which they resemble. He here humourously represents a person so sordidly avaricious, as to count the threads, or fibres, at the bottom of a leek, that if one of these should be missing he might find it out.

The epithets, festivum and festile, are given to that sort of leek, from its being usual to cut or shred it into small pieces when mixed with victuals of any kind. See AINSW. Sec-tivus.

134. Invited from the bridge.] See Sat. iv. 116. The bridges about Rome were the usual places where beggars took their stand, in order to beg of the passengers.

The poet, to finish his description of the miser's hoard of victuals, here tells us, that if this wretch were to invite a common beggar to such provisions as he kept for himself and family, the beggar would refuse to come.

135. But for what end, &c.] Some verb must be understood here, as habet, or possides, or the like—otherwise the accusative case is without a verb to govern it. We may then read the line—

To what purpose do you possess riches, gathered together by these torments—i. e. with so much punishment and uneasiness to yourself? See Sat. x. l. 12, 13.

136. Undoubted madness, &c.] So Hor. Sat. iii. Lib. ii. l. 82.

Danda est hellebori multò pars maxima avaris,
 Nescio an Anticyram ratio illis destinet omnem.

Misers make whole Anticyra their own;
 Its hellebore reserved for them alone. FRANCIS.

For Anticyra, see above, Juv. Sat. xiii. l. 97, note.

137. A needy fate, &c.] i. e. To share the fate of the poor; to live as if destined to poverty and want, for the sake of being rich

Quorum si pretio, dominus non vincitur ullo, 145

Nocte boves macri, lassoque famelica collo

Armenta ad virides hujus mittentur aristas;

Nec priùs inde domum, quàm tota novalia sævos rich when you die, a time when your riches can avail you nothing, be they ever so great.

138. When the bag swells, &c.] And all this, for which you are tormenting yourself at this rate, you find no satisfaction or contentment in; for when your bags are filled up to the very mouth, still you want more. The getting money, and the love of money, increase together: the more you have, the more you want.

Crescit indulgens sibi dirus hydrops, &c.

See Hor. Lib. ii. Ode ii. and Lib. iii. Ode xvi. l. 17, 18.

Crescentem sequitur cura pecuniam Majorumque fames.

140. He wishes for it less, &c.] A poor man looks no farther than a supply of his present wants; he never thinks of any thing more.

— Therefore.] Because thou art insatiable in thy desires.

— Is prepared, &c.] Not content with one country-house, another is purchased, and gotten ready, prepared for thy reception, as one will not suffice.

142. It likes you to extend, &c.] You think the present limits of your estate too confined, and therefore you want to enlarge them.

143. Neighbour's corn.] Arista is properly the beard of corn, and, by synec. the whole ear; and so the corn itself, as growing. You take it into your head that your neighbour's corn looks better than yours, therefore you determine to purchase, and to possess yourself of his estate.

In the mean time, when the bag swells with a full mouth,
THE LOVE OF MONEY INCREASES, AS MUCH AS MONEY ITSELF INCREASES;

And he wishes for it less, who has it not. Therefore is prepared 140

Another villa for you, when one country seat is not sufficient;
And it likes you to extend your borders; and greater appears
And better your neighbour's corn: you buy also this, and Groves of trees, and the mountain which is white with the thick olive:

With any price of which if the owner is not prevailed on, 145

By night the lean oxen, and the famished herds, with tired
Necks, will be sent to the green corn of this man.

Nor may they depart home from thence, before the whole crop Is gone into their cruel bellies, so that you would believe it done by sickles.

You can hardly say, how many may lament such things, 150

144. Groves of trees.] Arbustum signifies a copse or grove of trees, pleasant for its shade.

— Which is white, &c.] The bloom of the olive is of a white, or light grey colour. Densa here means a vast quantity.
See Sat. i. 120, note.

145. With any price of which, &c.] If you cannot tempt the owner to part with them for any price which you offer for the purchase, then you have recourse to stratagem to make him glad to get rid of them.

146. By night the lean oxen, &c.] In the night-time, when you are not likely to be discovered, you turn your oxen which are half-starved, and your other herds of grazing beasts, which are kept sharp for the purpose, into your poor neighbour's corn.

146—7. Tired necks.] That have been yoked, and at work all day, and therefore the more hungry.

147. To the green corn, &c.] In order to eat it up.

148. Nor may they depart home, &c.] They are not suffered to stir homeward, till they have eaten up the whole crop, as clean as if it had been reaped.

— The whole crop.] Tota novalia.—Novale est, saith Pliny, quod alternis annis feritur—"Land sown every other year," and therefore produces the more plentiful crops. Here, by met.
novalia

Et quot venales injuria fecerit agros.

Sed qui sermones? quàm foedæ buccina famæ?

Quid nocet hoc? inquit: tunicam mihi malo lupini,

Quàm si me toto laudet vicinia pago

Exigui ruris paucissima farra secantem.

155

Scilicet & morbis & debilitate carebis,

Et luctum & curam effugies, & tempora vitæ

Longa tibi post hæc fato meliore dabuntur;

Si tantum culti solus possederis agri,

Quantum sub Tatio populus Romanus arabat.

novalia signifies the crops that grow on such land.—See VIRG. Geor. i. l. 71.

151. Injury, &c.] Many have had reason to complain of such treatment, and have been forced to sell their land to avoid being ruined.

152. What speeches?] What does the world say of you, says the poet, for such proceedings?

—Trumpet of foul fame—] The poet is interrupted before he has finished, by the eager answer of the person to whom he is supposed to be speaking, and with whom he is expostulating.

153. What does this hurt?] says the miser—what harm can what the world says do? See Hor. Sat. i. l. 64—7.

—Coat of a lupine.] Lupinus signifies a kind of pulse, of a bitter and harsh taste, covered with a coat, husk, or shell. See Virg. G. i. l. 75—6. Isidorus says, that the best definition of lupinus, is, ἀπο τῆς λυπῆς, quod vultum gustantis amaritudine contristet. AINSWORTH thinks that lupinus signifies what we call hops; and this seems likely, as we may gather from the story in Athenæus, Lib. ii. c. xiv. where he relates of Zeno the Stoic, that he was ill-tempered and harsh, till he had drunk a quantity of wine, and then he was pleasant and good-humoured. On Zeno's being asked the reason of this change of temper, he said, that “the same thing happened to him as to lupines; for lupines, says he, before they are soaked in water are very bitter; but when put into water, and made soft by steeping, and are well soaked, they are mild and pleasant.”—Hops grow with coats, or laminæ, one over another. But whatever be the exact meaning of lupini, the meaning of this hasty answer of the miser's is as follows: “Don't talk to me of what speeches are made about me, or what the trumpet of fame may spread abroad, to the disadvantage of my character. I would not give a pin's head for all they can say against me, if I do but get rich:—but I would not give the husk of a lupine for the

And how many fields injury has made to be set to sale.

"But what speeches? how the trumpet of foul fame?"—

"Than if the neighbourhood in the whole village should

"Cutting the very scanty produce of a little farm." 155

I warrant you will want both disease and weakness,

And you will escape mourning and care; and a long space

of life,

After these things, will be given you with a better fate;

If you alone possess'd as much cultivated ground,

As, under Tattus, the Roman people ploughed. 160

"praise of all the town, if my farm be small, and afford but a "poor crop."

q. d. If I am rich, they can't hurt me by their abuse; but if poor, their praise will do me no good.

155. The very scanty produce.] Paucissima farra.—Far denotes all manner of corn. Paucissima need not be taken literally in the superlative sense, but as intensive, and as meaning, a very small, an exceeding scanty crop of corn. See note on densissima lectica, Sat. i. l. 120, n. 2. The comparative and superlative degrees are often used by the Latin writers only in an intensive sense.

156. I warrant, &c.] Here the poet is speaking ironically, as if he said to the miser—To be sure, Sir, people like you, who are above the praise or dispraise of the world, are doubtless exempted too from the calamities which the rest of the world suffer, such as sickness and infirmities. See Sat. x. l. 227. You are also out of the reach of affliction and sorrow. See Sat. x. l. 242—4. Carebis—you will be without—free from.

158. After these things, &c.] Add to all this, that you must live longer than others, and be attended with uncommon happiness—melioris fato—with a more prosperous and more favourable destiny.

159. If you alone possess'd, &c.] Provided that you were so wealthy as to possess, and be the sole owner of as much arable land as the people of Rome cultivated, when the empire was in its infancy, under Romulus, and Tattus the Sabine; who, for the sake of the ladies he brought with him, was received into the city, and confociated with Romulus in the government. However this might be considered as small, to be divided among all

161. Afterwards.] In after times—mox—ſome while after.

— Broken with age.] Worne out with age and the fatigues of war. Gravis annis miles. Hor. Sat. i. 5.

161—2. Had ſuffer'd the Punic wars.] Had undergone the toils and dangers of the three wars with the Carthaginians, which almoſt exhauſted the Romans.

162. Cruel Pyrrhus.] The king of Epirus, who vexed the Romans with perpetual wars, but, at laſt, was defeated and driven out of Italy.

— Moloffian ſwords.] The Moloffi were a people of Epirus, who fought againſt the Romans in Pyrrhus's army. See Sat. xii. l. 108, note.

163. At length.] i. e. After ſo many toils and dangers.

— Hardly two acres.] Jugerum—an acre, ſo called from jugum boüm, being as much land as a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. Scarcely ſo much as two acres were given as a reward for many wounds in battle.

165. Than no deſerts, &c.] And this portion of two acres, given to a ſoldier, as a reward for the blood which he had ſhed, and the toils he had undergone in the ſervice of his country, was never found fault with as too little for his deſerts, or as an inſtance of a breach of faith in his country towards him, by rewarding him leſs than he had reaſon to expect. Curtus means little, ſhort, curtailed, imperfect, broken. Curta fides may be applied to expreſs a man's coming ſhort of his promiſe.

166. Little glebe.] Such a ſmall piece of arable land.

166—7. Satiſfied the father.] The poor ſoldier, who was the father of a numerous family.

167. Rabbles

At length hardly two acres were given for many

167. Rabble of his cottage.] Consisting of his wife and many children, some small, others grown up.

— Big.] i. e. Big, or great, with child.

169. Bond-slave—three masters.] One of the four children that were playing together, a little bondslave born of a free slave. The three others were children of the wife, and therefore masters over the little slave, but all playing together, happy and content.

— Great brothers.] The elder children now big enough to go out to labour.

170. Ditch or furrow, &c.] Coming home from their day's work, at digging and ploughing.

171. More ample.] Their being grown up, and returning hungry from their labour, required a more copious meal, than the little ones who staid at home.

— Great pots.] Pots proportionably large to the provision which was to be made.

— Smoked with pottage.] Boiling over the fire. Puls was a kind of pottage made of meal, water, honey, or cheese and eggs sodden together. AINSW.

172. Measure of ground.] viz. Two acres, which, in antient days, was thought a sufficient reward for an old valiant defender of his country, after all his dangers, toils, and wounds, and which provided for, and made him and all his family happy, is not, as times go, thought big enough for a pleasure-garden.

173. Thence, &c.] From covetousness. Comp. l. 175.

Miscuit, aut ferro grassatur sæpiùs ullum
 Humanæ mentis vitium, quàm sæva cupido 175

 Quorum ope & auxilio, gratæ post munus aristæ, Contingunt homini veteris fastidia quercûs.
 Nil vetitum fecisse volet, quem non pudet alto 185

173. Causes of villainies, &c.] i. e. From this vile principle arise, as from their source, all manner of cruel and bad actions. See 1 Tim. vi. 10. former part.

— More poisons, &c.] Contrived more methods of destroying people, in order to come at their property, either by poison or the sword. See James iv. 1, 2.

175. A cruel desire.] Which thinks no act of cruelty too great, so that its end may be accomplished.

So Virg. Æn. iii. l. 56—7.

Quid non mortalia pectora cogis
 Auri sacra fames ?

176. Unbounded.] Lit. untamed—i. e. that cannot be kept or restrained within any bounds. A metaphor taken from animals that are wild and untamed, which are ungovernable, and not to be restrained.

— He who would be rich.] So the apostle, 1 Tim. vi. 9. οἱ βελομενοι πλετιν.

177. Would be so quickly.] And therefore takes the shortest way to carve for himself, through every obstacle.

— Reverence of the laws ?] The laws which are made to restrain all acts of murder, and violence, and fraud, are put totally out of the question, he treads them under his feet.

178. Hastening miser ?] A covetous man who hastens to be rich, has neither fear nor shame ; he dreads not what the laws can do to him, nor what the world will say of him. See Prov. xxviii. 22.

179. Live contented, &c.] The poet here mentions what was the doctrine of antient times, in the days of simplicity and frugality, by introducing the exhortation of some wise and thrifty father to his children.

Has any vice of the human mind mixed, or oftener
 Attacked with the sword, than a cruel desire 175
 Of an unbounded income ; for he who would be rich,
 Would be so quickly too. But what reverence of the laws ?
 What fear, or shame, is there ever of a hastening miser ?—
 “ Live contented with those little cottages and hills, “ O youths (said the Marfian and Hernician formerly, 180
 “ And the old Vestinian) let us seek bread by the plough, “ Which is enough for our tables : the deities of the coun“ try approve this,
 “ By whose help and assistance, after the gift of acceptable “ corn,
 “ There happen to man loathings of the old oak.
 “ He will not do any thing forbidden, who is not ashamed 185

180. O youths, &c.] Such was the language formerly of the fathers among the Marfi, the Hernici, and the Vestini, to their children, in order to teach them contentment, frugality, and industry.

— Marfian.] The Marfi were a laborious people, about fifteen miles distant from Rome.

— Hernician.] The Hernici, a people of New Latium.

181. Vestinian.] The Vestini were a people of Latium, bordering on the Sabines.

— Seek bread by the plough, &c.] Let us provide our own bread by our industry, as much as will suffice for our support.

182. Deities of the country.] The Romans had their rural gods, as Ceres, Bacchus, Flora, &c. which they particularly worshipped, as presiding over their lands, and as at first inventing the various parts of husbandry.

183. By whose help, &c.] He means particularly Bacchus, who first found out the use of wine, and Ceres who found out corn and tillage.

184. Loathings, &c.] Since the invention of agriculture, and the production of corn, men disdain living upon acorns, as at first they did. See Sat. vi. l. 10 ; and Virg. G. i. l. 5—23. where may be seen an invocation to Bacchus and Ceres, and the other rural deities, as the inventors and patrons of agriculture.

185. Any thing forbidden, &c.] Those who are bred up in poverty and hardship, are unacquainted with the temptations to vice, to which those who are in high life are liable.

Per glaciem perone tegi; qui summovet Euros

 Sed caput intactum buxo, naresque pilosas

186. Thro' ice to be cover'd, &c.] Pero—a sort of high shoe, made of raw leather, worn by country people as a defence against snow and cold. AINSW.

187. Inverted skins.] The skins of beasts with the wool or hair turned inwards next the body, to defend it from the cold winds, and to keep the wearer warm.

Thus shod and thus clothed were the hardy rustics of old time; they lived in happy ignorance of vice and luxury, and of all offences to the laws.

— Purple, &c.] q. d. The Tyrian purple, with which the garments of the rich and great are dyed, is a foreign piece of luxury, and unknown to us. The introduction of this, as well as other articles of foreign luxury, is the forerunner of all manner of vice and wickedness; for when once people cast off a simplicity of dress and manners, and run into luxury and expence, they go all lengths to supply their vanity and extravagance. It cannot be said of any such—nil vetitum fecisse volet.

189. These precepts, &c.] Such were the lessons which those rustic veterans taught their children, and delivered to the younger part of the community, for the benefit of posterity.

— But now.] i. e. As matters are now, fathers teach their children very different lessons.

190. After the end of Autumn.] When the winter sets in, and the nights are long and cold.

— From the middle of the night.] As soon as midnight is turned.

190—1. The noisy father.] Bawling to wake his son, who is lying along on his back (supinum) in his bed fast asleep.

191. The waxen tablets.] See note on l. 30.

192. Write.] Pen something that you may get money by.

— Watch.] Set up all night at study.

" Thro' ice to be cover'd with an high shoe ; who keeps " off the east wind

" With inverted skins. Purple, foreign, and unknown to us,
" Leads to wickedness and villainy, whatsoever it may be."
These precepts those antients gave to their posterity : but now,

After the end of Autumn, from the middle of the night, the noisy 190

Father rouses the supine youth : " Take the waxen tablets,
" Write, boy, watch, plead causes, read over the red
" Laws of our forefathers, or ask for a vine by a petition.
" But your head untouched with box, and your hairy nostrils,
" Lelius may take notice of, and admire your huge
" arms. 195

192. Plead causes.] Turn advocate—be called to the bar.

— Read over, &c.] Study the law.

192—3. The red laws.] So called, because the titles and beginning of the chapters were written in red letters. Hence the written law was called rubrica. See Perf. Sat. v. l. 90.

193. Ask for a vine, &c.] For a centurion's post in the army—draw up a petition for this.

The centurion, or captain over an hundred men, carried, as an ensign of his office, a stick or battoon in his hand, made out of a vine-branch ; as our captains do spontoons, and our serjeants halberds. See Sat. viii. l. 247, note.—If a man were to advise another to petition for an halberd, it would be equivalent to advising him to petition to be made serjeant. So here, the father advising his son to petition for a vine, i. e. a vine-branch, is equivalent to his petitioning to be made a centurion.

194. Untouched with box.] Your rough and martial appearance, owing to your hair lying loose, and not being combed. The Romans made their combs of box-wood.

— Hairy nostrils.] Another mark of hardiness ; for effeminate and delicate people plucked off all superfluous hairs. See Sat. ii. 11, 12. where hairiness is mentioned as a mark of hardiness and courage.

195. Lelius.] Some great general in the army may notice these things, as bespeaking you fit for the army.

— Huge arms.] Probably rough with hair. See above,

 Versetur, Dis atque ipso Jove digna, poetæ:

note 2. on l. 194.—Ala signifies the armpit, also the arm.—See AINSW.

196. Destroy the tents of the Moors.] Go and do some great exploit—distinguish yourself in an expedition against the people of Mauritania. Attegiæ (from ad and tegere, to cover) signifies cottages, huts, cabins, tents, and the like, in which people shelter themselves from the weather.

—Castles of the Brigantes.] Of the inhabitants of Britain. The people of Lancashire, Yorkshire, and other northern parts of England, were called Brigantes; they had strong castles.

197. That a rich eagle, &c.] The Roman ensign was the figure of an eagle, which was carried at the head of every regiment. The care of this standard was committed to the eldest captain of the regiment, and was a very rich post.

The father is here exhorting his son to go into the army; in order to which, first, he is to petition for the vine-rod, or centurion's post; then he exhorts him to go into service, and distinguish himself against the enemy, that, at sixty years old, he may be the eldest captain, and enrich himself by having the care of the standard, which was very lucrative. Hence Juvenal calls it locupletem aquilam.

198. Or if to bear, &c.] If you dislike going into a military life.

199. The horns, &c.] If the cornets and trumpets throw you into a panic at the sound of them, so that you are ready to be foul yourself when you hear martial music.

200. You may purchase, &c.] You may go into trade, and buy goods which you may sell for half as much more as they cost you.

201. Nor let the dislike, &c.] Don't be nice about what you deal

- " Destroy the tents of the Moors, the castles of the Brigantes,
 " That a rich eagle to thee the sixtieth year
 " May bring : or if to bear the long labours of camps
 " It grieves you, and the horns heard with the trumpets loosen
 " Your belly, you may purchase, what you may sell 200
 " For the half of more, nor let the dislike of any merchant-
 "dize,
 " Which is to be sent away beyond the Tiber, possess you.
 " Do not believe there is any difference to be put between " Ointments and an hide. THE SMELL OF GAIN IS " SWEET
 " FROM ANY THING WHATSOEVER. Let that sentence of the poet 205
 " Be always in your mouth, worthy the gods, and of Jove
 himself :

deal in, though ever so filthy, though such as must be manufactured on the other side of the Tiber.

202. Sent away beyond the Tiber.] Tanning, and other noisome trades, were carried on on the other side of the river, to preserve the city sweet and healthy.

203. Do not believe, &c.] Do not take it into your head, that one thing, which you may get money by, is better than another. So as you do but enrich yourself, let it be the same thing to you, whether you deal in perfumed ointments, or flinking hides.

204. The smell of gain, &c.] He alludes to the answer made by Vespasian to his son Titus, who was against raising money by a tax on urine.—Titus remonstrated with him on the meanness of such an imposition ; but he, presenting to his son the first money that accrued to him from it, asked him whether the smell offended him. Ant. Univ. History, vol. xv. p. 26.

205. Sentence of the poet, &c.] i. e. Of the poet Ennius, quoted l. 207.

206. Be always in your mouth.] Be always at your tongue's end, as we say.

— Worthy the gods, &c.] Juvenal very naturally represents this old covetous fellow, as highly extolling a maxim so exactly suited to his sordid principles.

See MOLIERE'S Avare, Act iii. Sc. v. where the miser is so pleased with a saying which suits his principles, as to want it written in letters of gold.

UNDE HABEAS QUÆRIT NEMO; SED OPORTET HABERE.

Hoc monstrant vetulæ pueris poscentibus assem :

Hoc discunt omnes ante Alpha & Beta puellæ.

Talibus instantem monitis quemcunque parentem 210

Sic possem affari : dic, ô vanissime, quis te

Festinare jubet ? meliorem præsto magistro,

Discipulum : securus abi : vincêris, ut Ajax

Præterit Telamonem, ut Pelea vicit Achilles.

Parcendum est teneris ; nondum implevêre medullas 215

Nativæ mala nequitæ : cùm pectere barbati

Cœperit, & longi mucronem admittere cultri,

Falsus erit testis, vendet perjuriam summâ

207. Nobody asks, &c.]

T' have money is a necessary task,
From whence 'tis got the world will never ask.

J. DRYDEN, Jun.

And therefore only take care to be rich, nobody will enquire how you came so. The poet, in the next two lines, humourously observes the early implanting this doctrine in the minds of children.

208. This, the old women, &c.] This maxim, old women, when their children ask them for a trifle to buy playthings, or some trash to eat, always take care to instil into their minds : they take this opportunity to preach up the value of money, and the necessity of having it, no matter how ; nobody will trouble their head about that.

The Roman as was about three farthings of our money.

209. This, all the girls, &c.] In short, children of the other sex too are taught this before their A B C. No marvel then, that avarice is so general and so ruling a principle.

210. Is instant.] Takes pains to impress such maxims upon his children.

211. Thus speak so.] Thus address myself to.

212. To hasten.] Who bid thee be in such a hurry to teach your son such principles ? why begin with him so young, and take so much pains ?

— I warrant.] So præsto signifies here. See AINSW. Præsto, N^o 8.

— The scholar better, &c.] A greater proficient than yourself in avarice, and in every other vice, in which you may instruct him.

213. Depart secure.] Make yourself quite secure and easy upon this subject.

"NOBODY ASKS FROM WHENCE YOU HAVE, BUT IT
"BEHOVES YOU TO HAVE."

This, the old women shew to the boys asking three far-
things :

This, all the girls learn before their Alpha and Beta.

Whatsoever parent is instant with such admonitions, 210
I might thus speak to : " Say (O most vain man) who com"mands

"Thee to hasten ? I warrant the scholar better than

"The master : depart secure : you will be outdone, as Ajax

"Surpassed Telamon, as Achilles outdid Peleus.

"You must spare the tender ones : as yet their marrows
"the evils 215

"Of native wickedness have not filled : when he has begun

"To comb his beard, and to admit the point of a long knife,

"He will be a false witness, he will sell perjuries for a small

213. As Ajax, &c.] Your son will outdo you in avarice, as much as Ajax surpassed his father Telamon, or as Achilles surpassed his father Peleus, in valour and warlike achievements.

215. You must spare, &c.] You must make allowance for the tenderness of youth, and not hurry your son on too fast ; have patience with him, he'll be bad enough by-and-by.

— Their marrows, &c.] The evil dispositions and propensities with which they were born (mala nativæ nequitiae) have not had time to grow to maturity, and to occupy their whole minds, as marrow fills the bones. The marrow, which is placed within the bones, like the bowels, which are placed within the body, is often figuratively, and by analogy, made use of to signify the inward mind.

Tully says, Fam. xv. 16. Mihi hæres in medullis—I love you in my heart. And again, Philip. i. 15. In medullis populi Romani, ac visceribus hærebant—they were very dear to the Roman people.

217. To comb his beard.] i. e. When he is grown up to maturity.

— To admit the point, &c.] The edge of a razor—a periphrasis for being shaved. See Sat. i. 25 ; and Sat. x. 226.

218. Sell perjuries, &c.] He will forswear himself for a very small price.

Exiguâ, Cereſis tangens aramque pedemque.

Elatam jam crede nurum, ſi limina veſtra 220

Per ſomnum digitis ? Nam quæ terrâque marique

Acquirenda putes, brevior via conferet illi :

Nullus enim magni ſcleris labor. hæc ego nunquam

Mandavi, dices olim, nec talia ſuaſi : 225

Mentis cauſa malæ tamen eſt, & origo penes te ;

Nam quiſquis magni cenſûs præcepit amorem,

Et lævo monitu pueros producit avaros ;

Et qui per fraudes patrimonia conduplicare

219. Touching both the altar, &c.] It was the cuſtom among the Romans, on occaſion of ſolemn oaths, to go to a temple, and, when they ſwore, to lay their hand upon the altar of the god. Here, to make his oath the more ſolemn, the miſer's ſon is repreſented, not only as laying his hand upon the altar of Ceres, but alſo on the foot of her image. See Sat. iii. l. 144, and note.

— Of Ceres.] The altar of Ceres was reckoned the moſt ſacred, becauſe, in the celebration of her worſhip, nothing was to be admitted that was not ſacred and pure. Sat. vi. l. 50.

220. Your daughter-in-law.] Your ſon's wife—pronounce her dead, if ſhe comes within your doors with a large fortune, for your ſon, her husband, will murder her, in order to get the ſole poſſeſſion of it.

— Carried forth.] i. e. To be buried, or, as the manner then was, to be burned on the funeral pile. See Ter. Andria, Act i. Sc. i. l. 90. See Sat. vi. l. 566.

221. With a deadly portion.] Mortiferâ cum dote—i. e. which is ſure to occaſion her death, by the hands of her covetous husband.

— By what fingers, &c.] How eager will his fingers be to ſtrangle her in her ſleep !

222. For, what things, &c.] What you may ſuppoſe others to get by traверſing land and ſea, in order to trade and acquire riches, your ſon will find a ſhorter way to come at, by murdering his wife.

224. There is no labour.] There is very little trouble in ſuch a buſineſs as this, it is ſoon done.

224—5. I never commanded, &c.] The time may come, when, ſeeing your ſon what I have been deſcribing, you will be for

- " Sum, touching both the altar and foot of Ceres."
- " Already believe your daughter-in-law carried forth, if " your thresholds 220
- " She enters with a deadly portion. By what fingers will
" she be pressed
- " In her sleep?—for, what things you may suppose to be " acquired
- " By sea and land, a shorter way will confer upon him :
- " For of great wickedness there is no labour. These things
" I never
- " Commanded, may you some time say, nor persuaded such
" things. 225
- " But the cause of a bad mind, nevertheless, and its origin,
" is in you :
- " For whoever has taught the love of a great income,
" And, by foolish admonition, produces covetous boys,
" And he who to double patrimonies by frauds,
" Gives liberty, loosens all the reins to the chariot, 230 for exculpating yourself, and you may say—" I never gave him

" any such orders—this was owing to no advice of mine."

226. But the cause, &c.] The poet answers—No, you might not specifically order him to do such or such an action, but the principle from which he acts such horrid scenes of barbarity and villainy, is owing to the example which you have set him, and originates from the counsel which you have given him to enrich himself by all means, no matter how ; therefore all this is penes te—lies at your door.

227. Whoever has taught, &c.] Whoever has given a son such precepts as you have given yours, in order to instil into him an unbounded love of wealth.

228. Foolish admonition, &c.] So lævus seems to be used, Æn. ii. 54 ; and Eclog. i. 16. Si mens non læva fuisset. See AINSW. Lævus, N° 2. But perhaps here it may mean unlucky, unfortunate, like sinistro.—See this Satire, l. 1, and note.

Or lævo may be here understood, as we sometimes understand the word sinister, when we mean to say, that a man's designs are indirect, dishonest, unfair.

— Produces covetous boys.] Brings up his children with covetous principles.

230. Gives liberty, &c.] i. e. So far from checking such dispositions,

Curriculo; quem si revoces, subsistere nescit,
 Et te contempto rapitur, metisque relictis.
 Nemo satis credit tantum delinquere, quantum
 Permittas: adeò indulgent sibi latius ipsi.
 Cùm dicis juveni, stultum, qui donet amico, 235
 Qui paupertatem levet, attollatque propinqui;
 Et spoliare doces, & circumscribere, & omni
 Crimine divitias acquirere, quarum amor in te est,
 Quantus erat patriæ Deciorum in pectore, quantum Dilexit Thebas, si Græcia vera, Menœceus, 240 positions, gives them full liberty to exercise themselves, pleased to see the thriftiness of a son, who is defrauding all mankind, that he may double his own property.

230. Loosens all the reins, &c.] Gives full and ample loose to every kind of evil. A metaphor, taken from a charioteer, who by loosening the reins, by which he holds and guides the horses, too freely, they run away with the chariot, and when he wants to stop them he cannot.

231. Which if you should recall, &c.] It is in vain to think of stopping or recalling such a one, who knows no restraint.

232. You contemned.] Having forfeited the authority of a father, all you can say, to stop his career, is held in the utmost contempt.

— The bounds being left.] As the charioteer is run away with by his horses (see note above, l. 230.) beyond the bounds of the race; so your son, who has had the reins thrown upon the neck of his vices, can neither be stopped, nor kept within any bounds whatsoever in his wickedness, but is hurried on, rapitur, by his passions, without any power of controul.

233. Nobody thinks it enough, &c.] Nobody will ever draw a line, so as to stop just at a given point, and only sin as far as he is permitted, and no farther.

234. So much do they indulge.] So prone are they to indulge their propensity to evil, in a more extensive manner.

235. When you say, &c.] When you tell your son, that giving money to help a distressed friend, or relation, is a folly.

236. Who may lighten, &c.] Alleviate his distress, and raise up his state of poverty into a state of plenty and comfort.

237. You both teach him to rob.] By thus seeking to destroy the

- " Which if you would recall, it knows not to stop,
 " And, you contemned, and the bounds being left, it is

 " Nobody thinks it enough to offend so much, as you may

 " Who may lighten, and raise up the poverty of a relation ;

the principles of humanity and charity within him, you teach him, indirectly at least, to rob, to plunder other people.

237. To cheat.] Circumscribere—to over-reach and circumvent, that he may enrich himself.

— By every crime, &c.] To scruple no villainy which can enrich him.

239. The Decii.] The father, son, and grandson, who, for the love they bare their country, devoted themselves to death for its service. See Sat. viii. 254, note.

240. Menœceus.] The son of Creon, king of Thebes, who, that he might preserve his country, when Thebes was besieged by the Argives, devoted himself to death; the oracle having declared, that Thebes would be safe, if the last of the race of Cadmus would willingly suffer death.

— If Greece be true.] If the Grecian accounts speak truth.

241. In the furrows of which, &c.] He alludes to the story of Cadmus, who having slain a large serpent, took the teeth, and sowing them in the ground, there sprang up from each an armed man; these presently fell to fighting, till all were slain except five, who escaped with their lives. See Ovid, Met. Lib. iii. Fab. i. See ANSW. Cadmus.

243. Trumpeter too bad risen.] To set them together by the ears.

ears. See above, l. 199, note. The Romans had cornets and trumpets to give the signal for battle.

244. The fire, &c.] The principles which you first communicated to the mind of your son, you will see breaking out into action, violating all law and justice, and destroying all he has to do with ; like a fire that first is kindled from little sparks, then spreads far and wide, till it devours and consumes every thing in its way.

246. Nor will he spare, &c.] He will not even spare you that are his own wretched father, or scruple to take you off (i. e. murder you) to possess himself of your property.

247. The young lion, &c.] Alluding to the story of a tame lion, which, in the time of Domitian, tore his keeper, that had brought him up, to pieces.

Læserat ingrato leo perfidus ore magistrum.

MARTIAL, Spectac. Epigr. x.

248. Your nativity, &c.] But, say you, the astrologers, who cast nativities, and who by their art can tell how long people are to live, have settled your nativity, and calculated that your life will be long.

— “ But it is grievous.] But, says Juvenal, it is a very irksome thing to your son.

249. To expect slow distaffs.] To be waiting while the fates are slowly spinning out your thread of long life. See Sat. iii. 27, note ; and Sat. x. 252, note.

— You'll die, &c.] You'll be taken off by a premature death, not by the course of nature, like those who live till their thread of life is cut by the destinies. See the references in the last note above.

250. You even now binder, &c.] You already stand in your son's

" Therefore the fire, the sparks of which yourself have given,
 " You will see burning wide, and carrying off all things. 245
 " Nor will he spare your miserable self, and the trembling
 " master
 " The young lion in his cage, with great roaring, will " take off."
 " Your nativity is known to astrologers."—" But it is
 " grievous
 " To expect flow distaffs : you'll die, your thread not yet
 " Broken off: you even now hinder, and delay his
 " wishes, 250
 " Now a long and stag-like old age torments the youth.
 " Seek Archigenes quickly, and buy what Mithridates
 " Composed, if you are willing to pluck another fig,
 " And to handle other roses : a medicine is to be had,

son's way, and delay the accomplishment of his daily wishes for your death, that he may possess what you have.

251. Stag-like old age.] The ancients had a notion that stags, as well as ravens, were very long-lived.

Cic. Tusc. iii. 69, says, that Theophrastus, the Peripatetic philosopher, when he was dying, accused nature for giving long life to ravens and stags, which was of no signification; but to men, to whom it was of great importance, a short life. See Sat. x. l. 247.

— Torments the youth.] Gives the young man, your son, daily uneasiness and vexation, and will, most likely, put him upon some means to get rid of you; therefore take the best precautions you can.

252. Archigenes.] Some famous physician; see Sat. vi. 235; and Sat. xiii. 98.—to procure from him some antidote against poison.

— Buy what Mithridates, &c.] See Sat. vi. 660, note.

253. If you are willing, &c.] If you wish to live to another Autumn—the time when figs are ripe.

254. Other roses.] And to gather the roses of another Spring.

— A medicine is to be had, &c.] You must get such an antidote against poison, as tyrants, who fear their subjects, and as fathers, who dread their children, always ought to swallow before they eat, in order to secure them from being poisoned at their meals; the tyrant, by some of his oppressed and discontented tented subjects—the father, by a son who wants to get his estate.

Sorbere ante cibum quod debeat aut pater aut Rex. 255

256. I shew, &c.] The poet is now about to expose the folly of avarice, inasmuch as the gratification of it is attended with cares, anxieties, and dangers, which its votaries incur, and for which they are truly ridiculous. Now, says he, monstro voluptatem egregiam—I'll exhibit an highly laughable scene, beyond all theatrical entertainments, &c.

— No theatres.] Nothing upon the stage is half so ridiculous.

257. No stages of the sumptuous prætor.] It was the office of the prætor to preside, and have the direction at the public games. See Sat. x. l. 36—41, notes.

The pulpitum was the higher part of the stage, where poets recited their verses in public.

It also signifies a scaffold, or raised place, on which the actors exhibited plays.

The prætor is here called lautus—sumptuous, noble, splendid, from the fine garments which he wore on those occasions, as well as from the great expence which he put himself to, in treating the people with magnificent exhibitions of plays and other sports. Sat. vi. 378, note.

258. If you behold, &c.] If you only observe what hazards and perils, even of their lives, those involve themselves in, who are increasing and hoarding up wealth—so far from security, danger and riches frequently accompany each other, and the means of increasing wealth may consist in the exposing life itself to danger.

259. Increase of an house.] The enlargement and increase of family-property.

— In a brazen chest.] See Sat. xiii. l. 74; and Hor. Sat. i. Lib. i. l. 67. The Romans locked up their money in chests.

260. Placed

"Which either a father, or a king, ought to sup up before
"meat." 255

I shew an extraordinary pleasure, to which no theatres,
No stages of the sumptuous prætor, you can equal,
If you behold, in how great danger of life may consist
The increase of an house, much treasure in a brazen
Chest, and money to be placed at watchful Castor, 260
Since Mars, the avenger, also lost his helmet, and his own Affairs he could not keep. Therefore you may leave
All the scenes of Flora, and of Ceres, and of Cybele,
By so much are human businesses greater sports.
Do bodies thrown from a machine more delight 265

260. Placed at watchful Castor.] i. e. At the temple of Castor.—They used to lay up their chests of treasure in the temples, as places of safety, being committed to the care of the gods, who were supposed to watch over them. Sat. x. 25, note, ad fin.

261. Since Mars, &c.] The wealthy used to send their chests of money to the temple of Mars; but some thieves having broken into it, and stolen the treasures, even stripping the helmet from the head of Mars's image, they now sent their treasures to the temple of Castor, where there was a constant guard; hence the poet says, vigilem Castora.

— The avenger.] When Augustus returned from his Asian expedition, which he accounted the most glorious of his whole reign, he caused a temple to be built in the capitol to Mars the Avenger. See Univ. Ant. Hist. vol. xiii. p. 507—8, and note F.

261—2. His own affairs, &c.] The poet takes an opportunity here, as usual, to laugh at the gods of his country. See Sat. xiii. 39—52.

263. The scenes.] Aulæa were hangings, curtains, and other ornaments of the theatres; here, by synec. put for the theatres themselves.

You may leave, says the poet, the public theatres; you will not want the sports and plays which are exhibited at the feasts of Flora, Ceres, or Cybele, to divert you.

264. By so much, &c.] You may be better entertained, and meet with more diversion, in observing the ridiculous businesses of mankind.

265. Bodies thrown from a machine, &c.] The petaurum (from πτερυγος, peritica, a perch, a long staff or pole) was a machine,

Corpora, quique solent rectum descendere funem,
 Quàm tu, Coryciâ semper qui puppe moraris, Atque habitas, Corø semper tollendus & Austro, Perditus, ac vilis sacci mercator olentis?

Qui gaudes pingue antiquæ de littore Cretæ 270
 Passum, & municipes Jovis advexisse lagenas?
 Hic tamen ancipiti figens vestigia plantâ
 Victum illâ mercede parat, brumamque famemque Illâ recte cavet: tu propter mille talenta, chine, or engine, made of wood, hung up in an high place, out of which the petauristæ (the persons who exhibited such feats) were thrown into the air, and from thence flew to the ground.

ANSW.

Others say, that the petaurus was a wooden circle, or hoop, through which the petauristæ threw themselves, so as to light with their feet upon the ground.

Holyday gives a plate of the petaurum, which is taken from Hieron. Mercurialis, whom he calls an excellent Italian anti-quary, and represents the petaurus like a swing, in which a person sits, and is drawn up by people who pull ropes, which go over a pole at top, placed horizontally, and thus raise the petaurista into the air, where probably he swung backwards and forwards, exhibiting feats of activity, and then threw himself to the ground upon his feet. See more on this subject, Delph. edit. in notis.

Whatever the petaurus might be, as to its form, it appears, from this passage of Juvenal, to have afforded an amusement to the spectators, something like our tumbling, vaulting, and the like.

266. To descend a strait rope, &c.] First climbing up, and then sliding down. Or if we take rectum here in the sense of tensum, stretched, we may suppose this a periphrasis for rope-dancing.

After all, taking the two lines together, I should doubt whether the poet does not mean rope-dancing in both, and whether the petaurum, according to the definition given by Ainsworth, signifies, here, any thing else than the long pole which is used by rope-dancers, in order to balance them as they dance, and throw their bodies into various attitudes on the rope. Comp. l. 272—4.

267. Than thou.] q. d. Art not thou as much an object of laughter—full as ridiculous?

— Who always abides.] Who livest on shipboard, and art tossed up and down by every gale of wind.

The mind, and those who are used to descend a strait rope,
Than thou, who always abidest in a Corycian ship,
And dwellest, always to be lifted up by the north-west wind, and the south,

Wretched, the vile merchant of a stinking sack?
Who rejoicest, from the shore of antient Crete, to have brought 270

Thick sweet wine, and bottles the countrymen of Jove.
He nevertheless fixing his steps, with doubtful foot,
Procures a living by that recompence; and winter and hunger
By that rope he avoids: you on account of a thousand talents,

267. A Corycian ship.] i. e. Trading to Corycium, a promontory in Crete, where Jupiter was born.

269. Wretched.] Perditus signifies desperate, past being reclaimed, lost to all sense of what is right.

— A stinking sack?] Olentis is capable of two senses, and may be understood either to signify that he dealt in filthy stinking goods, which were made up into bales, and packed in bags; or that he dealt in perfumes, which he brought from abroad: but by the epithet vilis, I should rather think the former.

271. Thick sweet wine.] Passum was a sweet wine made of withered grapes dried in the sun. Uva passa, a sort of grape hung up in the sun to wither, and afterwards scalded in a lixivium, to be preserved dry, or to make a sweet wine of. ANSW. The poet calls it pingue, from its thickness and lusciousness.

— The countrymen of Jove.] Made in Crete, where Jove was born. See Sat. iv. l. 33.

272. He nevertheless, &c.] The rope-dancer above mentioned, l. 265—6.

— Fixing his steps.] Upon the narrow surface of the rope.

— With doubtful foot.] There being great danger of falling. Planta signifies the sole of the foot.

273. By that recompence.] Which he receives from the spectators for what he does.

— Winter and hunger.] Cold and hunger. See Hor. Lib. i. Sat. ii. l. 6.

274. He avoids.] Cavet—takes care to provide against.

— You on account, &c.] The poor rope-dancer ventures his limbs to supply his necessary wants; you rashly expose yourself to much greater dangers, to get more than you want.

— A thousand talents.] Amounting to about 187,500*l.* of our money. See Holyday, note 9, on this Satire.

furies: his sister Electra embracing him, endeavoured to comfort him, but he said to her—" Let me alone, thou art one of " the furies; you only embrace me, that you may cast me into " Tartarus." Eurip. in Orest.

285. Eumenides.] The three furies, the daughters of Acheron and Nox—Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megæra. They were called Eumenides, by Antiphrasis, from Εὐμενεις, kind, benevolent. They are described with snakes on their heads, and with lighted torches in their hands.

286. This man, an ox being stricken, &c.] Ajax, on the armour of Achilles being adjudged to Ulysses (see Ov. Met. Lib. xiii.) ran mad, and destroyed a flock of sheep, thinking he was destroying the Greeks. He slew two oxen, taking one for Agamemnon, the other for Ulysses. See Sophoc. Ajax Mæti-gophorus.

287. Ibacus.] Ulysses, king of Ithaca. See Sat. x. 257.

— Spare his coats, &c.] Though he should not be so furiously mad, as to tear his clothes off his back.

288. Wants a keeper.] Curatoris eget—stands in need of somebody to take care of him.

— Who fills, &c.] Who, for the hopes of gain, loads a ship so deep, that there is nothing left of her above the water, but the uppermost part, or edges of her sides.

289. A plank, &c.] Has nothing between him and the fathomless deep but a thin plank. See Sat. xii. 57—59.

290. When the cause, &c.] The only motive to all this.

291. Silver battered, &c.] A periphrasis for money.—The silver of which it was made, was first cut into pieces, then stamped with the name and titles of the reigning emperor, and also with a likeness of his face. See Matt. xxii. 20, 21.

292. Clouds and lightnings occur.] The weather appears cloudy,

This man, an ox being stricken, believes Agamemnon to roar,

Or Ithacus. Tho' he should spare his coats and clokes, cloudy, and looks as if there would be a storm of thunder and lightning; but this does not discourage the adventurer from leaving the port.

292. "Loose the cable"] says he; "unmoor the ship, and "prepare for sailing."

Funem may signify either the cable with which the vessel was fastened on shore; or the cable belonging to the anchor, by which she was fastened in the water.

293. Cries the owner, &c.] The owner of the freight calls out aloud.

— The buyer-up of pepper.] Juvenal does not simply say, emptor, the buyer, but coemptor, the buyer-up; as if he meant to describe a monopolizer, who buys up the whole of a commodity, in order to sell it on his own terms:

294. This colour of the heaven.] This dark complexion of the sky.

— This black cloud.] Fascia signifies a swathe or band. A thick cloud was called fascia, because it seemed to swathe or bind up the sun, and hinder its light: but, perhaps, rather from its being an assemblage of many clouds collected and bound, as it were, together.

295. It is summer-thunder.] Nothing but a mere thunder shower, which will soon be over, and which in summer-time is very common, without any storm following.

295. Unhappy wretch!] Who is blinded by his avarice, so as to consider no consequences.

296. Beams being broken.] Shipwrecked by the ensuing tempest, he will fall into the sea, the timbers of his ship broken to pieces.

297. His girdle, &c.] Some think that the ancients carried their money tied to their girdles, from whence Plautus calls a cut-purse—sector zonarius. But I should rather think that they carried their money in their girdles, which were made hollow for that purpose. See Hor. Epist. ii. Lib. ii. l. 40. Suet. Vitell. c. 16. says—Zonâ se aureorum plenâ circumdedit.

— Left hand.] While he swims with his right.

— Or with his bite.] i. e. With his teeth, that he may have both hands at liberty to swim with.

298. But for him, &c.] Whose wishes were boundless, and whose desires after wealth were insatiable.

299. Tagus.] A river of Portugal. See Ov. Met. ii. 251.

— Pactolus.] A river in Lydia, called also Chrysoorhoas. Both these rivers were said to have golden sands. See Hor. Epod. xv. 20.

— Rolls.] Or throws up, by the course of its waters over the sands, so that it is found at low water. This is said to be the case of some waters in Africa, which flow down precipices with great impetuosity, and leave gold-dust, which they have washed from the earth in their passage, in the gullies and channels which they make in their way.

300. Rags covering, &c.] This very wretch, who could not before have been satisfied with all the gold of the Tagus and Pactolus, is now, having been shipwrecked and ruined by the loss of his all, very content, if he can but get rags to cover his nakedness from the inclemency of the cold.

Night he will fall, the beams being broken, and be pressed down by a wave,

Overwhelmed, and will hold his girdle with his left hand, or with his bite.

But for him, for whose wishes a while ago the gold had not sufficed,

Which Tagus, and Pactolus rolls in its shining sand, Rags covering his cold thighs will suffice, 300

And a little food; while, his ship being sunk, shipwrecked, he Asks a penny, and beholds himself in a painted tempest,

Are kept—miserable is the custody of great wealth,

301. A little food.] Bestowed upon him in charity, or purchased with the few pence he gets by begging.

301—2. He asks a penny.] Who before wanted a thousand talents, more than he had, to content him. See l. 274. See Sat. v. l. 144, note 2.

302. A painted tempest.] Persons who had lost their property by shipwreck used to have their misfortune painted on a board, and hung at their breasts, to move compassion in the passers by; as we often see sailors and others begging in the streets, with an account of their misadventures written on paper or parchment, and pinned on their breasts.

303. With so many evils.] But suppose all this be avoided, and the man comes home rich and prosperous, still he is not happy: he must be harrassed with continual care, anxiety, and dread, in order to keep what he has gotten, and these may give him more uneasiness than any thing else has given him in the pursuit of his wealth.

304. Miserable is the custody, &c.] The constant watchfulness, the incessant guard, that are to be kept over heaps of wealth, added to the constant dread of being plundered, may be truly said to make the owner lead a miserable life. This is well described by Horace, Sat. i. l. 76—79.

305. Licinus.] The name of some very rich man. It stands here for any such.—Wealthy—prædives, very rich, beyond others wealthy.

306. Buckets set in order.] Hama signifies a water-bucket made of leather. Ans.—Dispositis, properly disposed, so as to be ready in case of fire.

306. Affrighted.] Half distracted, as it were, with apprehension.

307. His amber.] Lest he should lose his fine cups and other vessels made of amber. Electrum also signifies a mixture of gold and silver, whereof one fifth part was silver. AINSW.

— His statues.] Signum denotes a graven, painted, or molten image, a figure of any thing.

— Phrygian column.] His fine ornamented pillars, made of marble brought out of Phrygia, a country of the Lesser Asia.

308. For his ivory.] His furniture made or inlaid with ivory. See Sat. xi. l. 122—4, and notes.

— Broad tortoise-shell.] His couches, and other moveables, richly inlaid and ornamented with large and valuable pieces of tortoise-shell. See Sat. xi. 94, and note.

— The casks, &c.] Dolia, the plural put for the singular, per synec. The cask of Diogenes, the Cynic philosopher, is here meant, which was not made of wood, as has been commonly supposed, but of clay baked, and so in no danger of fire. Dolum signifies any great vessel, as a tun, pipe, or hogthead.—In these dolia the antients used to keep their wine. Hence Ter. Heaut. Act iii. Sc. i. l. 51. Relevi omnia dolia—which some translators have rendered, “I have pierced every cask.” But, however that may be agreeable to our idiom, piercing an earthen vessel, which the dolum was, is not to be supposed. Lino signified the securing the mouth, or bung hole, of any vessel with pitch, rosin, or wax, to prevent the air’s getting in, to the prejudice of what might be contained in it; and as this was never omitted, when any vessel was filled with wine, hence it is used for putting wine into casks.

Alexander perceived, when he saw, in that cask,
The great inhabitant, how much happier this man was, who Desired nothing, than he, who required the whole world,
About to suffer dangers to be equalled to things done.

Thou hast no divinity, O Fortune, if there be prudence :
thee we, 315

We make a goddess. Nevertheless the measure of an estate

Relino -evi, signifies, consequently, to remove the resin, or pitch, upon opening the vessel for use.

309. Break them.] Should you dash them all to pieces, so as not to be repaired, such another habitation is very easily provided.

310. Solder'd with lead.] Any fracture or chink may easily be stopped, by fixing some lead over it, or pouring some melted lead into the crack, which would fill it up.

311. Alexander.] Alexander the Great might easily perceive how much happier, and more content, Diogenes was in his poverty, than he who coveted empire so much as not to be content with one world. This alludes to the story of Alexander's coming to Corinth, where he found Diogenes, and not being saluted by him, Alexander went up to him, and asked him "if he could do any thing for him?" "Yes," said Diogenes,
"stand from between me and the sun."

— In that cask.] Testā.—This shews that the vessel, or hog'shead, which Diogenes lived in, was not made of wood.

312. The great inhabitant.] Diogenes, the chief of the Cynics, very properly so styled, from κυων, κυνος, a dog, from the snarling furliness of their manners; of this we have a specimen, in the answer of Diogenes to Alexander above mentioned.

314. About to suffer, &c.] i. e. To expose himself to, and to undergo dangers, proportionate to his attempts to accomplish his vast designs, and equal to all the glory which he might acquire.

315. No divinity, &c.] See Sat. x. l. 365—6, and notes.

316. The measure, &c.] If I were asked what I thought a competency

Sufficiat census, si quis me consulat, edam.

In quantum sitis atque fames & frigora poscunt :

Quantum, Epicure, tibi parvis sufficit in hortis :

Quantum Socratici cepervit antè Penates. 320

NUNQUAM ALIUD NATURA, ALIUD SAPIENTIA DICIT.

Acribus exemplis videor te claudere ; misce

Ergo aliquid nostris de moribus ; effice summam,

Bis septem ordinibus quam lex dignatur Othonis.

Hæc quoque si rugam trahit, extenditque labellum, 325

Sume duos Equites, fac tertia quadringenta :

competency sufficient to furnish the comfortable necessities of life, I would answer as follows—

318. As much, &c.] That which will suffice—as much as is required for food and raiment. So St. Paul, 1 Tim. vi. 8.

Nescis quo valeat nummus ; quam præbeat usum ?

Panis ematur, olus, vini sextarius ; adde

Queis humana sibi doleat natura negatis.

HOR. SAT. I. l. 73—5.

“ Would you the real use of riches know ?

“ Bread, herbs, and wine are all they can bestow.

“ Or add what Nature’s deepest wants supplies,

“ These, and no more, thy mass of money buys.”

FRANCIS.

So Pope, in his use of riches, Eth. Ep. iii. l. 81—2.

“ What riches give us let us first enquire,

“ Meat, fire, and clothes—what more ?—meat, clothes,
“ and fire.”

319. Little garden.] See Sat. xiii. 122—3. hortis, plur. per synec. pro horto, sing.

320. Socratic Penates, &c.] i. e. As much as Socrates required and took for the maintenance of his household. Here, by meton. called Penates, from the household gods which were in his house.

— Before.] i. e. In earlier times, before Epicurus. Socrates died four hundred years before Christ ; Epicurus two hundred and seventy-one.

321. Natura never says, &c.] i. e. Nature and wisdom always agree in teaching the same lesson. By nature, here, we must understand that simple principle which leads only to the desire of the necessary comforts of life,

Which may suffice, if any should consult me, I will declare.
 As much as thirst and hunger, and cold require ;
 As much, Epicurus, as sufficed thee in thy little garden ;
 As much as the Socratic Penates had taken before. 320
 NATURE NEVER SAYS ONE THING, WISDOM ANOTHER.
 I seem to confine you by four examples ; mix
 Therefore something from our manners ; make the sum
 What the law thinks worthy the twice seven ranks of Otho.
 If this also draws a wrinkle, and extends your lip, 325
 Take two knights, make the third four hundred,

If we go farther, the term nature may extend to the appetites and passions, which, in their desires and pursuits, suit but ill with the dictates of wisdom.

Mr. Pope, Eth. Epist. iii. l. 25—6.

“ What nature wants ” (a phrase I much distrust)

“ Extends to luxury, extends to lust.”

&c.

322. I seem to confine, &c.] By saying this, I may seem, perhaps, too severe, and to circumscribe your desires in too narrow a compass, by mentioning such rigid examples of persons, of what you may think four dispositions.

323. Our manners.] That I may not be thought too scanty in my allowance, I will permit you to mingle something of our more modern way of thinking and living.

— Make the sum, &c.] Suppose you make up, together with what I have mentioned as sufficient, a sum equal to a knight's estate, which, by a law of Roscius Otho the tribune, called the Roscian law, was to amount to four hundred sestertia revenue per annum, about 3,125 l. of our money.

324. Twice seven ranks, &c.] Fourteen ranks or rows of seats in the theatre were assigned to the equestrian order. See Hor. Epod. iv. l. 15, 16 ; and Juv. Sat. iii. l. 155—6, and notes.

325. If this also draws, &c.] If this contracts your brow into a frown, and makes you pout out your lips, as in disdain or displeasure—as we say, hang the lip—i. e. if this, as well as the examples before mentioned, of Socrates and Epicurus, displeases you—

326. Take two knights.] Possess an estate sufficient for two of the equestrian order. See above, l. 323, note 2.

— Make the third four hundred.] E'en add a third knight's estate, have three times four hundred sestertia.

327. Filled

Si nondum implevi gremium, si panditur ultra:
 Nec Cræsi fortuna unquam, nec Persica regna Sufficiunt animo, nec divitiæ Narcissi, Indulsi Cæsar cui Claudius omnia, cujus 330

327. Filled your bosom, &c.] A metaphor alluding to the garments of the antients, which were loose, and which they held open before to receive what was given to them. Comp. Is. lxxv. 6, 7. Luke vi. 38.

The poet means—If I have not yet satisfied your desires by what I allow you: if I have not thrown enough into your lap, as we say. See Sat. vii. 215, and note.

 q. d. If your desires are still extended beyond this.

328. Fortune of Cræsus.] The rich king of Lydia. See Sat. x. 274.

— Persian kingdoms.] The kings of Persia, particularly Darius and Xerxes, were famed for their magnificence and riches.

329. Suffice

SAT. XIV. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 237

If as yet I have not filled your bosom, if it be opened farther,
Neither the fortune of Cræsus, nor the Persian kingdoms,
Will ever suffice your mind, nor the riches of Narcissus,
To whom Claudius Cæsar indulged every thing, whose 330 Commands he obey'd, being ordered to kill his wife.

329. Suffice your mind.] Will be sufficient to gratify your desires.

— Riches of Narcissus.] A freedman and favourite of Claudius Cæsar, who had such an ascendancy over the emperor, as to prevail on him to put Messalina to death, after her paramour Silius. See Sat. x. l. 330—345. Claudius would have pardoned her adultery, but, at the instigation of Narcissus, he had her killed in the gardens of Lucullus. By the favour of the emperor, Narcissus was possessed of immense wealth.

END OF THE FOURTEENTH SATIRE.

S A T I R A XV.

A R G U M E N T.

The Poet in this Satire, which he is supposed to have written when he was under his banishment into Ægypt, relates the mortal and irreconcilable hatred, which sprung from a religious quarrel between the Ombites and Tentyrites, inhabitants of two neighbouring cities of Ægypt—and describes, in very lively colours, a bloody fray which happened between them. He seems to lay this as a ground for those fine reflections, with which he finishes the Satire, on the nature, use, and intention of civil society.

In reading this Satire, it is difficult not to advert to the monstrous cruelties which superstition and bigotry have brought on mankind, while those who have disgraced the Christian name by bearing it, have, with relentless fury, inflicted tortures and death on thousands of innocent people, for no

Line 1. Bithynian Volusius.] Who this Volusius was does not appear ; all that we know is, that he came from Bithynia, a country of the Lesser Asia, and was undoubtedly a friend of Juvenal, who addresses this Satire to him.

2. Mad Ægypt.] Demens not only means mad, i. e. one that has lost his senses, but also silly, foolish ; which perhaps is meant here, in allusion to the silly superstition which possessed the minds of the Ægyptians in religious matters.

— This part.] One part of Ægypt.

— Adores a crocodile.] That part of Ægypt which lies near the river Nile worships the crocodile ; a dreadful amphibious other crime than a difference of opinion in religious matters.

MARSHALL, in his note on l. 36, thus expresses himself—“Hinc simultas & odium utrique populo oriebantur, nempe “ ex diversitate religionum, quæ in mundo etiam Christiano, “ Di boni! quantas strages excitavit!”

The attentive reader of this Satire will find a lively exhibition of those principles which actuate bigots of all religions, zealots of all persuasions; and which, as far as they are permitted, will always act uniformly against the peace and happiness of mankind. He may amuse himself with allegorizing the Ombites and Tentyrites into emblems of blind zeal and party rage, which no other bounds than want of power have kept from desolating the earth.

WHO knows not, Bithynian Volusius, what monstrous things

Mad Ægypt can worship? this part adores a crocodile;

bious animal, shaped something like a lizard, and, from an egg little bigger than that of a goose, grows to be thirty feet long. The Egyptians know how high the river will rise that year, by the place where the crocodiles lay their eggs. The crocodile was worshipped with divine honours, because these animals were supposed to have destroyed the Libyan and Arabian robbers, who swam over the river and killed many of the inhabitants.

3. An Ibis.] A certain bird, which is a great destroyer of serpents. See ANSW.

4. A golden image, &c.] In another part of Ægypt, viz. at Thebes, they worship the image of a monkey made of gold. Cercopithecus is derived from the Gr. κερκος, a tail, and πρῖνος, an ape. The difference between the ape and the monkey is, that the ape has no tail; the monkey has, and usually a very long one.

5. Magic chords, &c.] At Thebes, in Ægypt, there was a colossal statue of Memnon, a king of Æthiopia, who was slain by Achilles at the siege of Troy: this statue was made of hard marble, and with such art, that a lute, which was in its hand, would itself give a musical sound when the beams of the sun came upon it.

Cambyfes, king of Persia, ruined the city, and caused the statue to be broken about the middle, imagining the sound to proceed from some contrivance within, but nothing was found. From this time the music was thought to be magical. Strabo says, that he and others heard the music about one in the afternoon, but confesses he could not understand the cause.

6. Hundred gates.] At Thebes, in Ægypt, there were an hundred gates; the city from thence was called Hecatompolis. This city was destroyed by Cambyfes, who conquered Ægypt. It was originally built by Bûsiris, the fabled son of Neptune. See Sat. xiii. l. 27, and note.

7. Sea-fish.] Cœruleos—because taken out of the sea, which, by reflecting the blue sky, appears of an azure or sky-blue colour. So Virg. Æn. iii. 208.

Adnixa torquent spumas, & cœrula verrunt—i. e. æquora.

8. Worship a dog.] They worship their god Anubis under this form. See Sat. vi. 533, note.

— Nobody Diana.] They worship the hound, but not the huntress.

A golden image of a sacred monkey shines,
 Where the magic chords resound from the half Memnon, 5
 And antient Thebes lies overthrown with its hundred gates.
 There sea-fish, here a fish of the river; there Whole towns worship a dog, nobody Diana.
 It is a sin to violate a leek or onion, or to break them with a bite.

O holy nations, for whom are born in gardens 10
 These deities! Every table abstains from animals bearing Wool: it is there unlawful to kill the offspring of a she-goat,
 But lawful to be fed with human flesh. When Ulysses Was telling, at supper, such a deed to the astonish'd huntress. Juvenal seems to mistake here, for Herodotus observes that Diana was worshipped in that country under the name of Bubastis; which adoration, under another name, might occasion this mistake. But see AINSW. Bubastis.

9. A sin to violate a leek, &c.] "Perhaps our poet, here, goes a little beyond the strict truth, to heighten the ridicule, though there might be possibly some foundation for such an opinion, from the scrupulous abstinence of some of that nation from particular vegetables, as lentils, beans, and onions, the latter of which the priests abominated, as some pretend, because Dictys, who had been brought up by Isis, was drowned in seeking after them; or rather, because onions alone, of all plants, thrive when the moon is in the wane." See Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. i. p. 484.—For the religion of Ægypt, see also Ib. p. 467, & seq.; and Abr. of Hutchinson, p. 122.

10. O holy nations, &c.] Meaning the various parts of Ægypt, whose worship of leeks and onions he has just mentioned. This sarcasm is very natural after what he has said.

11. Every table, &c.] i. e. They never eat sheep, or lambs.

12. Offspring of a she-goat.] i. e. A kid.

The hatred of the Ægyptians to the Israelites, both as shepherds and as Hebrews, is supposed to have arisen from the latter killing and sacrificing those beasts, which were held sacred and worshipped in Ægypt. See Gen. xliii. 32; and xlv. 34. See Ant. Un. Hist. vol. iii. p. 338, B.

13. Human flesh.] Diod. Lib. ii. c. 4. says, that in a time of famine in Ægypt, when the Ægyptians were sorely pressed with hunger, they spared their sacred animals, and ate the flesh of men.

the island of Phæacia, or Corcyra (now Corfu), was entertained by Alcinöus the king, to whom he related his travels.

15—16. Anger or laughter.] He recited such monstrous incredibilities, that no doubt he excited the spleen of some of the company, and the laughter of others.

16. Lying babbler.] Aretalogus (from ἀρετή and λόγος) signifies a talkative philosopher, who diverted great men at their tables by discourses on virtue. From hence this word has been frequently used for a talkative person, a jester, a buffoon.

— “ Into the sea, &c.”] The poet supposes one of the company, who heard the strange tales of Ulysses, when at the court of Alcinöus, expressing himself as in an amaze, that nobody should take him and throw him into the sea for his strange lies. Abicit—i. e. abjicit.

17. Worthy of a true Charybdis.] He has told such a romance about a feigned whirlpool, which he calls Charybdis, in the straits of Sicily, that he certainly deserves a real one for his pains.

18. Feigning Læstrygonians.] A rude and savage people near Formiæ, in Italy; they were like giants, and devoured men. See Odyss. x.

— Cyclops.] These were represented as man-eaters. See Odyss. i. Also Virg. Æn. iii. 616, & seq.

19. Sooner Scylla, &c.] I can sooner believe his tales about Scylla (the daughter of Phorcys, the father of the Gorgons) who is said to be changed into a dangerous rock in the midway between Italy and Sicily. See Virg. Ecl. v. 74—7.

— Concurring rocks, &c.] Called Cyanææ, otherwise Symplegadæ, two rocks at a small distance from the Thracian Bosphorus, so close to one another, that they seem at a distance to be one; and, as one passeth by, he would think they dash against each other: they were therefore called Symplegadæ, from Gr. σπν and πλνσν, to strike together.

20. Bags

Alcinöus, perhaps, in some, he moved anger or 15

Laughter, as a lying babblers:—"Into the sea does nobody "Throw this fellow, worthy of a cruel and true Charybdis,

"Feigning huge Læstrygonians, and Cyclops?

"For sooner Scylla, or the concurring rocks

"Of Cyané, and bags full of tempests 20

"Circe;

"Has he thought the Phæacian people are so empty-headed?"

Thus deservedly any one, not as yet drunk, and who, a very little

20. Bags full of tempests.] When Ulysses arrived at the island of Æolus, that king of the winds inclosed the adverse ones in leathern bags, and hung them up in Ulysses's ship, leaving at liberty the west wind, which was favourable. But the companions of Ulysses untied the bags, being curious to know what they contained, and let out the adverse winds; immediately a tempest is raised, which drives the ship back to the Æolian isles, to the great displeasure of Æolus, who rejects Ulysses and his companions. They then sail to the Læstrygons, where they lose eleven ships, and, with one only remaining, proceed to the island of Circe. See Odyss. x. ad init.

21. Wand of Circe.] She was said to be the daughter of Sol and Perseis; she was a sorceress. She poisoned her husband, the King of the Scythians, that she might reign alone; for which, being expelled her kingdom, she went into Italy, and dwelt in a promontory called the Cape of Circe; whither Ulysses and his companions were driven (see the last note, ad fin.) many of whom, by a touch of her magic wand, she turned into swine; at last, on entreaty, she restored them to their former shapes.

22. Elpenor.] One of Ulysses' companions.

— Swine-rowers.] The crew of the ship, who rowed her, were turned into swine, and grunted like that animal. In those days the ships were rowed with oars, as well as driven by sails.

23. Has he thought, &c.] Has this Ulysses so mean an opinion of the Phæacians, as to imagine them so empty-headed, so void of understanding, that they should receive such a pack of incredible stories, of bags, of tempests, &c. &c.? But even these are more probable, and sooner to be believed, than what he relates of the Læstrygons and Cyclops, as if they were man-eaters; this shocks all belief.

24. Thus deservedly, &c.] The above reflections would be very just, and proper for any one to make, unless he had drunk away his senses, and was incapable of distinguishing truth from falsehood.

 Immortale odium, & nunquam sanabile vulnus

25. Strong wine.] Temetum, a word signifying strong wine, from Gr. το μεθυ, vinum; whence μεθυσκω, to be drunk. So from temetum comes temulentus, drunken. See Hor. Epist. Lib. ii. Epist. ii. l. 163.

— Corcyræan urn.] Corcyra, an island in the Ionian Sea, on the coast of Albania, antiently called Phæacia. So that the poet means the wine of that country, made by the Phæacians, who were famous for luxury. The urn signifies the vessel (or hog'shead, as we call it) out of which they drew the wine, in order to drink it.

26. Ulysses related this, &c.] He told these stories entirely on his own credit, having no witness present to avouch the truth of what he said, therefore he might reasonably be disbelieved.

— Related.] Canebat.—The word cano, when it signifies to relate or report, particularly applies to things uttered by poets, who do not always stick to truth, but indulge their fancies in strange improbabilities: it is therefore here well applied to Ulysses, when telling such stories to Alcinoüs.

Why Ulysses was called Ithacus, see Sat. x. 257, note 2.

27. We will relate, &c.] I shall now relate something very astonishing, not merely on my own authority, but which can be attested, as lately and publicly transacted.

27—28. Junius being consul.] Some consule Vinco, others Junco; but no such name of a consul appears as Vincus, or Juncus. Junius Sabinus was consul with Domitian, an. U. C. 836, N. C. 84. The poet dates the time of his facts for the greater certainty.

28. Upon the walls, &c.] i. e. At Coptus—in the city.

— Warm Coptus.] A metropolitan city of Ægypt near the Nile,

SAT. XV. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 245

Strong wine, from a Corcyraean urn had drawn : 25

For Ulysses related this without any witness.

We will relate wonderful things, and lately done (Junius being

Consul) upon the walls of warm Coptus ;

We the wickedness of the vulgar, and more grievous than all buskins :

For wickedness, tho' you should turn over all the tragedies 30

From Pyrrha, no whole people commits among the tragedians. Hear

What an example dire cruelty has produced in our time.

There burns as yet, an old and antient grudge,
An immortal hatred, and a wound not to be healed,

Nile, over which the sun at noon is vertical ; therefore Juvenal calls it warm, or hot. He names the place, as well as the time, where the things happened which he is going to relate.

29. The vulgar.] I am not going to tell facts which relate to myself, or to any single individual, but what was committed by a whole people.

— Than all buskins.] More grievous than is to be found in any tragedy. Cothurnus, the buskin worn by the actors of tragedy, is often, as here, used to denote tragedy itself, by me-tonym. See Sat. vi. 633—5, note.

30. For wickedness, &c.] i. e. Though you should turn over all the tragedies which have been written since the days of Deucalion and Pyrrha, when mankind were restored after the flood, you will find no poet representing a piece of barbarity, as the act of a whole people at once, as in the instance I am going to relate.

— All the tragedies.] Syrmata were long garments used by actors in tragedy. Here, per metonym. (like cothurnis in the preceding line) put for tragedies.

31—2. Hear what an example.] Now attend, and I will tell you my story, in which you will find an example which was the effect of the most savage barbarity, perpetrated in our days, not merely by an individual, but by a whole nation together.

33. Antient grudge, &c.] Here the poet begins his narrative of the quarrels between the Ombites and the Tentyrites, two people of Ægypt, who were neighbours, and who hated one another mortally, on account of their difference in religion.

Ardet adhuc Ombos & Tentyra. summus utrinque 35
 Inde furor vulgo, quod numina vicinorum
 Odit uterque locus; cum solos credat habendos
 Esse Deos, quos ipse colit: sed tempore festo
 Alterius populi rapienda occasio cunctis

 Barbara famoso non cedit turba Canopo.

35. On both sides.] They were, on each side, equally inveterate in their malice to each other. The word Tentyra, in this line, is in the accusative plur. and so afterwards, l. 76.

36. The vulgar.] This rage of one people against the other spread itself, not only among the chiefs (l. 39.) but among the common people on both sides.

— Because the deities, &c.] The Ombites abominated the objects of the Tentyrites worship, and those of the Ombites were equally detested by the Tentyrites—neither allowing that there were any gods worthy of worship but their own.

Their quarrel was on the score of religion, which is always the most implacable of all others.

The Ombites worshipped the crocodile, which the Tentyrites destroyed; these worshipped the hawk.

38. In a festival time.] The custom of feasting seven days for the happy overflowing of the Nile was annually observed by the Ombites.

39. All the chiefs, &c.] The chiefs of the other people, that is, of the Tentyrites, thought this a fine opportunity, which should not be lost, to spoil their sport at their festival.

40—1. Left a glad, &c.] They determined to prevent their festive mirth, and to imbitter the joy of their feasts.

42. The tables being placed, &c.] In the crocodile's temple.

— And streets.] Compita—places where several ways met, in which the country people came together to their wakes, and to perform their sacrifices, when they had made an end of their husbandry.—The Ombites are here said to do the same at their festival in the city of Coptus.

43. The wakeful bed.] The antients, as has been before observed,

SAT. XV. JUVENAL'S SATIRES. 247

Between the bordering Ombos and Tentyra. Thence, on both sides, 35

The highest fury in the vulgar, because the deities of their neighbours

Each place hates, since it can believe them only to be accounted

Gods, which itself worships : but, in a festival time,
There seem'd, to all the chiefs and leaders of the other people,
An opportunity to be seized, lest 40

A glad and chearful day, lest the joys of a great feast
They should be sensible of, the tables being placed at the temples, and streets,

And the wakeful bed, which, lying night and day, Sometimes the seventh sun found. Rude indeed is Ægypt, but in luxury, as far as I have remarked, 45

The barbarous rabble does not yield to infamous Canopus.

Add too, that the victory is easy over the drunken and stammering, served, lay on beds, or couches, at their meals. The poet calls it the wakeful bed, from the length of time the beds were occupied by the feasting guests, who sat up night and day for many days together, as the next line informs us.

44. Sometimes the seventh sun found.] The Ægyptians held the number seven sacred, and more especially believed, that during their festival of seven days the crocodiles lost their natural cruelty.

Hence the poet means, that the sun, at his rising, found them lying on the festal couches for seven days together.

45. But in luxury, &c.] q. d. The people of Ægypt are rude and uncultivated ; but in the article of luxury, the rabble, barbarous as they are, equal the Canopians themselves, at least in that part of the country where I have been. See Sat. i. l. 26, note on Canopus.

— As far as I have remarked.] It is to be observed, that Juvenal, having inserted into his writings some sharp lines against Paris a player, a favourite of Domitian, was banished into Ægypt, under a pretence of sending him with a military command ; so that, during his abode there, he had a full opportunity to observe the manners of the people, and to make his remarks upon them.

47. Add too.] q. d. It is moreover to be observed.

47. ViBory, &c.] It is a very easy matter to get the better of people, when they are so drunk as hardly to be able to speak, or stand upon their legs, and, of course, very unable to defend themselves. See 1 Sam. xxx. 16—17. 1 Kings xvi. 9.

48. There.] i. e. On the part of the Ombites.

— Of the men, &c.] The men diverted themselves with dancing.

49. A black piper.] A black Æthiopian playing on his pipe, as the music to their dances.

— Ointments such, &c.] It was customary at feasts to anoint the head with sweet-smelling ointments ; but these vulgar Ægyptians were not very nice in this matter, but made use of any grease that came to hand.

50. And flowers.] It was also usual to make chaplets of flowers, which they put on their heads. See Sat. xi. 121—2, and notes.

— On the forehead.] The crowns, or chaplets of flowers, surrounded the heads of those that wore them, on these occasions, but were most conspicuous about the forehead and temples.

51. Here.] i. e. Among the other party, the Tentyrites.—The hinc in this line, answers to the inde, l. 48.

— Fasting hatred.] The Tentyrites, on the contrary, were fasting, and their hatred, like their hunger, was fierce and insatiable. Their hatred was like an hungry appetite, which longs after something to satisfy it. Jejunum here is metaphorical, and taken from the idea of an hungry person who longs for food ; so did their hatred hunger after the destruction of their adversaries the Ombites.

— First brawlings, &c.] The Tentyrites began the fray with bitter reproaches and abuse.

And reeling with wine : There, a dancing
Of the men, with a black piper ; ointments such As they were, and flowers, and many chaplets on the forehead ; 50
Here, fasting hatred : but their first brawlings they begin To sound, their minds burning : these the trumpet of the quarrel.

Then they engage with equal clamour, and instead of a weapon
The naked hand rages : few cheeks without a wound :
Scarce to any, or to none, in the whole engagement, a nose 55
Whole : already you might see, throughout all the bands, half Countenances, other faces, and bones gaping from their broken

Cheeks, fists full of the blood of their eyes.
Nevertheless they believed themselves to play, and to exercise

52. To sound.] To utter forth as loud as they could. Metaph. from the sounding a trumpet for battle.

— Minds burning.] i. e. Their minds on fire, as it were, with anger, malice, and revenge, against the Ombites.

— These.] The reproaches and abuse which they uttered.

— The trumpet, &c.] Alluding to the custom of giving the signal for battle by the sound of a trumpet, when two armies met. This was supplied by the foul and provoking abuse which the Tentyrites gave the Ombites. See Sat. xiv. l. 199.

53. With equal clamour.] This roused the Ombites, and both sides were equally clamorous and noisy in their abuse of each other—this brought them to blows.

— Instead of a weapon, &c.] Having no darts, swords, or other weapons, they went to fighting with their fists.

56. All the bands.] Agmen, properly, signifies an army, a company of soldiers, chiefly infantry.—The poet, here, humourously applies the word agmina to these fist-warriors.

56—7. Half countenances.] Some having an eye beat out, others their teeth, and the like.

57. Other faces.] So mawled, as to be disfigured in such a manner, that they could hardly be known to be the same persons.

— Bones gaping, &c.] Their jaw-bones fractured, and appearing through the wounds in their cheeks.

58. Blood of their eyes.] Which had been torne, or knocked out of their heads.

59. Nevertheless, &c.] Notwithstanding all this mischief, nobody

Exercere acies, quod nulla esdavera calcent : 60
 Et sanè quò tot rixantis millia turbæ,
 Si vivunt omnes ? erge acrior impetus, & jam

 Nam genus hoc vivo jam decreſcebat Homero.

 Ergo Deus quicumque aspexit, ridet, & odit.

nobody had been killed, they therefore had not the satisfaction of treading any of their enemies dead bodies under their feet ; therefore they reckoned all that had hitherto happened no more than mere sport—no better than children's play, as we say.

61. What purpose, &c.] What signifies, say they, such a number of fighting people, if no lives be lost ?

62. The attack is sharper.] This whets their appetite for mischief, and they fall to with still more acrimony than before.

63. Stones, &c.] They picked up the stones, wherever they could find them, on the ground where they fought.

— Arms reclined.] They stooped, directing their arms downwards to the ground, to gather stones, which they began to throw.

64. Domestic weapons, &c.] Domestica tela—the commonly usual, familiar weapons, in such quarrels as these, among a rabble, who fall together by the ears. Seditio means a mutinous rising—also quarrel, strife—among people of the same neighbourhood.

65. Turnus.] Who took up a stone, and threw it at Æneas. This stone is said to have been so large, as hardly to be lifted by twice six men of modern strength and stature. See Æn. xii. l. 896—901.

— Ajax.] See Il. ii. l. 264—70. where Hector and Ajax are throwing stones at each other ; when Ajax takes up a mill-stone, and throws it at Hector, which broke his shield.

66. Tydides.] Diomedes, the son of Tydeus, who threw a stone, as big as two men could lift, at Æneas, and wounded him on the hip. Il. i. l. 303—4.

The poet applies these silly stories, one should suppose, rather to laugh at them, than any thing else.

Puerile battles : because they can tread on no corpses : 60
And indeed, for what purpose are so many thousands of a fighting

Multitude, if all live ? therefore the attack is sharper, and now Stones, gotten throughout the ground with arms reclined,
They begin to throw, the domestic weapons
Of sedition ; nor these stones such as both Turnus and Ajax, 65

Or with the weight with which Tydides struck the thigh
Of Æneas : but those that right hands unlike to them
Could send forth, and born in our time ;
For this race was decreasing, Homer being yet alive.
The earth now brings forth bad men, and small ; 70 Therefore whatever god hath beheld them, he laughs and hates.

67. But these, &c.] The stones with which the Ombites and Tentyrites attacked each other, were not such as were wielded and thrown by Turnus, &c. but such as could be managed by the hands of the present race of men, who are greatly inferior, in size and strength, to those Homeric heroes.

69. For this race, &c.] This race had degenerated even in the days of Homer ; for speaking of the stone which Diomedes threw at Æneas, Homer says

—μῆλα ἔργον, ὃ κ' ὄνομα' ἀνδρῶν φερόμενον
Ὅτιος τοῦ βέβηλος ἔστιν.

A vast weight, which two men, such as there are now, could not carry. II. E. I. 303—4.

So Virgil, speaking of the stone which Turnus threw at Æneas, Æn. xii. 899, 900—

Vix illud lefti bis sex cervice subirent, Qualia nunc hominum producit corpora tellus.

70. The earth now brings forth, &c.] The present race of men are bad as to their morals, and small as to their size, if compared with those of old time—thus has the human race degenerated.

71. Whatever god, &c.] No superior being can behold them, without laughing at the ridiculous contentions of such diminutive creatures, and hating the abominable principles which produce them.

72. Let

72. Let the story, &c.] q. d. But to return to the story, from my digression about Ajax, &c.

73. Increased with succours, &c.] Were augmented by some auxiliaries.

— One party.] The Tentyrites. Comp. Sat. xii. 115, note.

— Dares to draw, &c.] Ventures to draw the swords with which their auxiliaries had furnished them. Comp. l. 53—4.

75. Urge their enemies.] i. e. The Ombites, who had turned their backs, and were running away as fast as they could.

76. Who inhabit Tentyra, &c.] Tentyra -orum, an island and city of Ægypt, near which there was a mountain covered with palm-trees.—q. d. The Tentyrites urged—pressed upon—the flying Ombites. This line should stand in construction before l. 75.

77. Here.] Just at this juncture.

— One, &c.] One of the flying Ombites, in his over fear and haste, fell down, and was taken prisoner by the Tentyrites.

79. One dead man, &c.] They cut this poor creature into as many pieces as they could, that every one might have a bit of him, sufficient for a taste.

80. The victorious rabble, &c.] Or multitude of the Tentyrites, entirely devoured him.

80—1. Bones being gnawed.] They gnawed and picked his bones.

81. Nor did they boil him.] Decoxit is singular, but agrees with with

Let the story be fetched back from the digression. After they Were increased with succours, one party dares to draw

The sword, and to renew the fight with hostile arrows.
They urge their enemies, giving their backs to swift flight, 75
Who inhabit Tentyra near the shady palm-tree.

Here one slips down, hastening his course with too much Fear, and is taken ; but him cut into a great many Pieces and particles (that, one dead man for many Might suffice) the victorious rabble ate all up, the bones 80
Being gnawed : nor did they boil him in a burning kettle,
Or with spits : they thought it so very long, and tardy,
To wait for fires, content with the raw carcase.

Hence we may rejoice, that they did not violate fire,
Which Prometheus, stolen from the highest part of heaven, 85

Gave to the earth. I congratulate the element, and thee with turba (l. 81.), which being a noun of multitude, the singular verb is best translated here in the plural number. So putavit in the next line.

82. Or with spits.] Or roast the pieces of him on spits.

— So very long, &c.] Their impatience was too great for them to wait the kindling and burning of fire, and the tedious process of boiling or roasting.

83. Content with the raw carcase.] They were perfectly contented with eating his dead body quite raw. Contenta here relates to the victrix turba:

84. Hence we may rejoice, &c.] The poet addresses his friend Volusinus: and, I do suppose, with an intent here, as elsewhere, when he can find occasion, to sneer at the superstitious notions of his countrymen, relative to their mythology, particularly with regard to the fable of Prometheus. See Sat. iv. l. 133, note. We may on this occasion, says he, be glad that these Tentyrites offered no pollution to the sacred element of fire, by dressing human flesh with it.

85. Which Prometheus, &c.] See Sat. iv. l. 133, note.

— From the highest part of heaven.] From Jupiter himself, and brought it down to earth.

86. I congratulate the element.] I wish it joy of its escape from pollution.

86. And

Exultare reor : sed qui mordere cadaver
 Sustinuit, nihil unquam hâc carne libentiùs edit :
 Nam scelere in tanto ne quæras, aut dubites, an Prima voluptatem gula senferit : ultimus autem 98
 Qui stetit absumpto jam toto corpore, ductis
 Per terram digitis, aliquid de sanguine gustat.

Vascones (ut fama est) alimentis talibus usi

 Fortunæ invidia est, bellorumque ultima, casus
 Extremi, longæ dira obsidionis egestas.
 Hujus enim, quod nunc agitur, miserabile debet
 Exemplum esse cibi : Sicut modò dicta mihi gens
 Post omnes herbas, post cuncta animalia, quicquid

86. And thee, &c.] As for thee, Volusinus, I think thou must exult in this circumstance as well as myself. The introduction of these reflections, in the close of his mock-heroic account of the battle, makes very much for supposing that he speaks ironically here, as where he introduces Turnus, Ajax, and Diomedes, l. 65—6.

87. He who bore, &c.] The man who could endure to bite, and champ between his teeth, human flesh, did it, no doubt, with as much relish as he would eat any thing else, especially as his appetite was sharpened by the malice which he bore the Om-bites.

89. Ask not, nor doubt, &c.] You need not question or doubt whether people, capable of committing so horrible a wickedness as this, to glut their revenge, had a delight in it; and whether those who were present at the beginning of the meal, and so had their first share of the flesh, felt a pleasure in devouring it.

90—1. He who stood.] He, whoever he was, that stood farthest off, perhaps not being able to get through the crowd, to the spot where the flesh was devoured, till the whole was consumed—

91. His fingers, &c.] He observing some of the blood on the ground, scraped it up with his fingers, and then sucked them with great satisfaction, as affording him, at least, a taste of his enemy's blood. This must stand as a sufficient reason, against all doubt, that the eaters of the carcase had the highest pleasure in so doing—l. 89, 90.

93. The Vascons.] A people of Spain, inhabiting between the river Iber and the Pyrenean mountains. They were besieged by Metellus and Pompey, and reduced to such necessity, that I think to exult: but he, who bore to gnaw the carcase,

 Never ate any thing more willingly than this flesh:
 For in so great wickedness ask not, nor doubt, whether
 The first gullet perceived a pleasure. But he 90 Who stood farthest, the whole body now consumed, his fingers

Being drawn along the ground, tastes something of the blood.

The Vascons (as the report is) using such aliments, Prolong'd their lives: but the matter is different: but there
 Is the envy of Fortune, and the utmost of wars, extreme 95
 Misfortunes, the dire want of a long siege.

For the example of this food, which is now in question, ought

To be lamented: as the nation, which I just now mentioned,
 After all herbs, after all animals, whatever that the living were forced to eat the dead, but were at last relieved by Sertorius, a general of Marius's party.

93. As the report is.] As the story goes, as we say.

— Using such aliments.] Eating human carcases.

94. Prolong'd their lives.] Which otherwise must have been lost in the straits of the siege; which occasioned a severe famine.

— Different.] But this was a very different thing from feeding on human flesh, as the Tentyrites did, out of choice, and out of revenge on their enemies.

95. Envy of Fortune.] The poor Vascons were under the frowns of Fortune; they experienced the malice of that fickle goddess. See Sat. iii. l. 39, 40; and Sat. vi. l. 604. and Hor: Lib. i. Ode xxxiv. l. 14, & seq. and Ode xxxv. per tot.

— Utmost of wars.] The utmost distress which war could occasion.

95—6. Extreme misfortunes.] The very last symptoms of desperation.

96. Dire want, &c.] See above, note on l. 93, 94.

97. Which is now in question.] i. e. The matter which I am now treating, viz. the Vascons eating human flesh.

97—8. Ought to be lamented, &c.] Is not to be looked upon as a crime, but as a most lamentable instance of such a thing.

98. As the nation, &c.] The Vascons just mentioned above.

99. After all herbs, &c.] After they had consumed all sorts

101. Their ſlender limbs.] The very fleſh waſted from their bones.

102. Tore with hunger, &c.] They tore, through ſtreſs of hunger, the limbs of thoſe that had died, and were almoſt ready to ſerve themſelves in the ſame manner. See Deut. xxviii. 53—57.

103. Who of men, &c.] All this was excuſable from the dire neceſſity of their ſituation, therefore they ought to be forgiven, not only by men, but by the gods themſelves.

104. Forces.] Viribus—i. e. men who had ſuffered ſo much by exerting all the force of their ſtrength and courage to defend their city againſt the beſiegers.

105. Whom the manes, &c.] Who could think of condemning a people under ſuch circumſtances of diſtreſs, when the ghoſts which once inhabited the bodies which they devoured muſt be ſuppoſed to forgive them.

107. The precepts of Zeno, &c.] He was the founder of the Stoics; and taught, that though ſome things might be done to preſerve life (pro vitâ), yet not every thing; indeed, not any thing that was unbecoming or diſhoneſt.

108. A Cantabrian.] The Vaſcons were a people of the Cantabrians, in the ſouth-eaſt of Spain.

Are to be done for life. But a Cantabrian whence
A Stoic—especially in the age of old Metellus?
Now the whole world has the Grecian, and our Athens: 110
Eloquent Gaul taught the British lawyers—
Thulé now speaks of hiring a rhetorician.

109. In the age of old Metellus.] Who lived before arts, sciences, and philosophical knowledge, flourished as they do now. See l. 93, note 1.

110. Now the whole world—] Now learning and philosophy are every where extended, and Grecian as well as Roman letters diffeminated. None, therefore, could now plead ignorance, and be excusable on that account, as the poor Vascons undoubtedly were.

—The Grecian, and our Athens.] The Grecian Athens was the seat of learning and philosophy, from whence the Romans received them, and so cultivated them, as to make Rome another Athens, as it were.

111. Eloquent Gaul, &c.] See Sat. i. l. 44, note; and Sat.
vii. 147—8. Some of the Gallic orators came over to Britain, and taught eloquence.

112. Thulé.] To determine exactly, among so many different opinions as are given about the part of the world here meant by Thulé, is not very easy: some say it means Iceland, others Schetland. It is certain that it was the farthest northern part known to the Romans. Virg. Georg. i. l. 30, calls it Ultima Thulé. AINSWORTH calls it an island the most remote in the northern parts, either known to the Romans, or described by the poets.

The idea of such a remote and desolate part of the earth sending for a rhetorician to refine their speech, throws an air of banter on what he has been saying, from l. 107, about Zeno's precepts, &c. as if, in such a case of necessity as that of the Vafcons, precepts of learning and philosophy could countervail the calls of nature, sinking under the extremity of hunger.

113. That people whom, &c.] The Vafcons.

— Were noble.] In their persevering and steady resistance, to the very last, in the defence of their besieged city.

113—14. Equal in valour and fidelity, &c.] Saguntus was a city of Spain beyond the river Ebro, a most faithful ally to the Romans ; for when they had holden out against Hannibal, and were almost famished, rather than submit, they chose to burn themselves, their wives and children, which was the cause of the second Punic war. Virtus here signifies military courage.

The Saguntines equalled the Vafcons in the noble defence which they made, and exceeded them in the slaughter of themselves and families, rather than to submit to the enemy.

115. Excuses, &c.] Such a thing as eating the flesh of dead men may stand excused, if excited by such distress as the Saguntines were in, especially when compared with the slaughter made upon themselves, and all that were dearest to them.

— Ægypt is more cruel.] i. e. The Tentyrites, a people of Ægypt, whose cruelty we have been relating.

115—16. Mæotic altar.] An altar near the lake Mæotis, sacred to Diana, where they sacrificed strangers—which horrid cruelty continued till the coming of Pylades and Orestes.

116. Tauric inventress.] Diana Taurica, so called from her being worshipped by the people of Taurica, where this altar was ; and therefore the poet calls her the inventress of these cruel rites, wherein strangers were sacrificed.

Or Taurica may mean the country itself, which is called the inventress, &c. because Thoas, king of Chersonesus Taurica, was the inventor of this horrid barbarity. He was slain by Orestes, who went thither to fetch away his sister.

117. What

Yet that people whom we have spoken of, were noble :
and equal

In valour and fidelity, but greater in slaughter, Saguntus; Excuses something like this. Ægypt is more cruel than the Mæotic 115

Altar : for that Tauric inventress of a wicked Rite (as now you may believe what verses deliver;
As worthy credit) only slays men, nothing beyond,
Or more grievous, does the victim fear, than a knife. But

117. What verses deliver.] You may, after the history which I have given you of the Tentyrites, believe any thing that the poets have written on the subject of cruelty. He alludes to Euripid. Trag. Iphig. in Tauris.

118. Nothing beyond.] Men are here killed in sacrifice, but nothing is further done, such as devouring their dead bodies, and the like : therefore the victim has nothing to fear, after having his throat cut.

119—20. Impelled these.] i. e. These Tentyrites—what has driven them to such excess of barbarity ? what calamitous circumstances have happened to force them into such savage-ness ?

120. So great hunger.] Can they plead the necessities of famine, like the besieged Vascons ?

— Or arms.] The power of an enemy's arms, to which they must either submit or die, like the Saguntines ?

120—1. Hostile to a rampart.] That are levelled at the rampart, or trench, which surrounds the besieged, with a determination to destroy, and are calculated for that purpose.

121. Have compelled them.] Like the poor people above spoken of.

— So detestable a monstrous thing.] As to eat a dead human body, pick the very bones, and lick the blood from off the ground.

122. Other displeasure, &c.] The river Nile overflowed
Ægypt at a certain time of the year, and fertilized the country.

Invidiam facerent nolenti surgere Nilo ?

Quâ nec terribiles Cimbri, nec Britones unquam, Sauromatæque truces, aut immanes Agathyrsi, 125

Hâc sævit rabie imbellæ & inutile vulgus,
Parvula fictilibus solitum dare vela phaselis,
Et brevibus pictæ remis incumbere testæ.

Nec pœnam sceleri invenies, nec digna parabis
Supplicia his populis, in quorum mente pares sunt 130

If this did not happen, the Ægyptians used to do some horrid act of cruelty, thinking thereby to provoke the river to overflow the country. This was taken from the example first set by Busris, who slew a man in sacrifice ; but it was the very man himself who proposed the expedient. We have the story in Ovid, De Art. Am.

Dicitur Ægyptus caruisse juvantibus arva Imbribus, atque annos sicca fuisse novem.
Quum Thrafilus Busrin adit, monitratque piari Hospitis effuso sanguine posse Jovem.
Illi Busris : fies Jovis hostia primus, Inquit, & Ægypto tu dabis hospes aquam.

By this we see that an human sacrifice was offered to placate Jupiter ; this was the first intention, in order to obtain an overflowing of the Nile. In after times the Ægyptians lost sight of this, and exercised acts of cruelty, thinking, by this, to irritate the Nile, and to make it overflow the whole country. Solebant accolæ immani quadam crudelitate illum ad inundationem irritare. See Marshall, and Britan. in loc.

Or did the miscreants try this conjuring spell,
In time of drought to make the Nile to swell ? TATE.

Having given the opinions of others on this passage, I now must give my own ; for doing acts of cruelty, in order to obtain a benefit from the river, which they might suppose to be already angry with them, from its withholding its water, appears to me very strange.

I should think the poet's meaning to be, that these Ægyptians, the Tentyrites, had, without any necessity compelling them to it, without any excuse to extenuate their crime, been guilty of so monstrous a wickedness, that they could not have found out any other so likely to provoke the Nile to withhold its waters in a time of drought, and to bring a famine upon the country, by thus increasing the Nile's unwillingness to help them.

So

Of Memphis being dry) to the Nile unwilling to rise?
 With such fury, as neither the terrible Cimbri, or Britons,
 And the fierce Sauromatæ, or the cruel Agathyrsi, 125
 Ever raged with, the weak and useless vulgar, Accustomed to spread little sails in earthen boats,
 And to ply the short oars of a painted earthen vessel.
 Nor can you find a penalty for the wickedness, nor prepare Punishments worthy these people, in whose mind equal 130

So a late translator—"What worse impiety could they commit, to provoke the Nile to stay within its banks when the country of Ægypt is chapt with drought?"
 And Holyday—

—By what fact

Could they have more made their kind Nilus flow
 To rise, and their parch'd Memphian land o'erflow?

122—3. Land of Memphis.] The city of Memphis (now Grand Cairo) was the grand metropolis of that part of Ægypt, and therefore gave its name to it. The Nile there divided, and intersected the land in various places, so as to resemble the form of a delta; that part of Ægypt was therefore called the Delta.

124. Cimbri.] See Sat. viii. l. 249, note. The poet calls them terribles, not only from their hardy valour, but, probably, from the destruction and havock which they had made of several of the Roman armies.

—Britons.] A hardy warlike people of Germany. Tacit.

125. Fierce Sauromatæ.] See Sat. ii. l. 1, note.

—Agathyrsi.] A people of Sarmatia; they were named after Agathyrsus, a son of Hercules.

The poet means to say, that the Tentyrites raged with a fierceness and cruelty, with which these great, mighty, and warlike nations never did.

126. Weak and useless vulgar.] A contemptible and worthless rabble.

127. Accustomed to spread, &c.] They made vessels of burnt clay, in which they sailed upon the Nile a fishing.

128. The short oars, &c.] They painted their little earthen boats, by way of ornament, and rowed them with short oars.

The poet mentions these circumstances of their boats, to shew the contemptibleness and vanity of these Ægyptians.

129. Find a penalty, &c.] In short, the baseness and wickedness of the Tentyrites exceeds all power of finding any punishment or torture adequate to their deserts.

130. In whose mind, &c.] They make no distinctions in their mind, between the necessity which has forced others to eat human flesh, and doing this themselves from a mere principle of anger and malice.

132. Nature confesses, &c.] From the evidence of what we feel within ourselves, we may gather, as from the confession of a fact the truth of it, that nature has furnished us with hearts susceptible of the tenderest feelings.

133. Has given tears.] Those outward symptoms of sorrow and compassion, which are given to no other creature.

— This best part, &c.] Because by flowing in pity and commiseration, they bespeak the most amiable qualities of the mind.

134. She commands, therefore, &c.] To sympathize with our friends in their griefs may be called a dictate of nature. See Rom. xii. 15.

135. Squalid appearance, &c.] It was customary for persons arraigned in a court of judicature to appear in rags and dirtiness, in order to move the compassion of the judges. But as squalor signifies, sometimes, "the sorrowful and mourning estate of those that are arraigned or accused," this idea of the word may be here meant, at least inclusively. See ANSW. Squalor, No 3.

136. His defrauder.] i. e. His guardian, who was left in trust with his person and estate during his minority, and has cheated and defrauded him. Circumscriptor means a cozenor, a cheater, one that circumvents or over-reaches another.

— Girl-like hairs, &c.] The tenderness, youth, and innocence of the poor orphan—his hair, like that of a girl, long and hanging loose, and dishevelled; his smooth and delicate face, wet with the tears flowing from his eyes, and his appearance altogether, is such, as to render it almost uncertain to the beholders of which sex the sufferer is, who is thus obliged to cite his iniquitous guardian into a court of justice, in order to obtain redress. See Sat. x l. 222, note on Hirrus.

And alike are hunger and anger. Most tender hearts

Who has given tears, this best part of our sense.

And less than the fire of the pile. For what good man, or 138—9. An adult virgin, &c.] When we meet the funeral of a beautiful young woman, snatched away by the hand of death in all the bloom of youth, nature bids us mourn—we can't resist its impulse.

This circumstance, here introduced by our poet, reminds one of an exquisitely fine and tender passage on a like event. Hamlet, Act v. Sc. i. where the queen says of the deceased Ophelia, who had been prematurely snatched away by death—

“ Sweets to the sweet :—farewell !

[Scattering flowers.]

“ I hop'd thou should'st have been my Hamlet's wife,—

“ I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd,

“ And not have strew'd thy grave.”

See Ter. And. Act i. Sc. i. l. 77—109.

139. An infant shut up, &c.] The law forbid burning the bodies of infants that died before they had lived forty days—or (according to some) before seven months old, when they had teeth. They used to bury them in a place which was called Suggrundarium. See AINSW.

140. Less than the fire, &c.] i. e. Too little to be burnt on a funeral pile. See the last note.

140—1. Worthy the secret torch.] i. e. Worthy to be initiated into, or to be present at, the sacred rites, which were celebrated in honour of the goddess Ceres.

These rites were celebrated by night ; the worshippers carried lamps,

lamps, or lighted torches, in their hands, in memory of Ceres, who, by fire-light, had sought after her daughter Proserpine, when she was stolen by Pluto out of Sicily. Ceres is fabled to have lighted those fires, which have burned ever since, on the top of Mount Ætna.

141. Such as the priest of Ceres, &c.] None were admitted to the Eleusinian mysteries (for so the rites of Ceres were called, from Eleusis, a town in Attica, built by Triptolemus, who, being instructed by Ceres, taught the people to sow corn) but those who by the priest were pronounced chaste and good, free from any notorious crime.

142. Thinks any evils, &c.] q. d. There is no real good man who can think himself unconcerned in the misfortunes of others, be they what they may: his language will be like his in Terence—

Homo sum, humani nihil a me alienum puto.

Heaut. Act. i. Sc. i. l. 25.

— This separates us, &c.] i. e. This distinguishes men from brutes, who know nothing of this.

143. And therefore.] i. e. For this very end and purpose, that we may sympathize with others woes.

144. A venerable disposition.] A disposition and inclination to partake in others sorrows, is deserving the highest esteem and reverence, and this has fallen to the lot of mankind alone.

— Capable of divine things.] A capacity to apprehend divine things is the property of man alone. This is a very great truth; but, alas! how sad an use the wise men of this world made of this gloriously-distinguished faculty, may be seen—Rom. i. 21, 22, & seq.

145. Apt for exercising, &c.] The invention, understanding, and exercise of the arts, whether mechanical, or others, are also peculiar to man.

146. We have drawn.] Traximus—i. e. we have derived, as we should say.

— Sense.] Moral sense, reason.

— Sent down.] Demissum—let down. Traximus demissum sum seems to be metaphorical, taken from the idea of a cord, or chain, let down from on high, which a person below takes hold of, and draws down to himself.

146. From the celestial top.] Arx signifies the top, peak, or ridge of any thing, as of a rock, mountain, or hill; also a palace, temple, or tower, often built on high. See Sat. xiv. l. 86—8. Hence heaven, or the residence of the gods, is called Arx Cœli.

Nos tua progenies, cœli quibus annuis arcem.

Æn. i. 254.

147. Which.] i. e. Which moral sense.

— Prone things, &c.] Beasts, called prona, from their inclining, with the face stooping downward to the earth; whereas man is erect, and looks upward. Here seems to be an imitation of Ovid, Met. Lib. i. l. 84—7.

Pronaque cum spectent animalia cœtera terram,
Os homini sublime dedit cœlumque tueri
Jussit, & erectos ad sidera tollere vultus.

So Sallust. Omnis homines qui sese student præstare cæteris animalibus &c. quæ natura prona, & ventri obedientia finxit. Bell. Catil. ad init.

148. The common builder, &c.] i. e. Common nature, for Juvenal ascended no higher—the God of Nature he knew not. Compare l. 132—4. See Acts xvii. 23—9.

— To them.] i. e. To the brute creation.

149. Only souls.] Animas—a principle of mere animal life; which is called the spirit of a beast, Eccl. iii. 21.

— To us a mind also.] To us human beings nature has not only given a principle of animal life, but also a rational mind, by which we reflect, and judge, and reason. The anima, or soul, is that by which we live; the animus, or intellectual mind, is that by which we are wise above the brutes. See Sat. vi. l. 530, note.

149. A mutual affection.] The end for which this intellectual mind is given us, so far as it relates to the purposes of society, is, to incline us to bestow, as well as to require, mutual good offices towards each other ; and therefore it disposes us to mutual affection.

151. The dispersed, &c.] To collect men, who are naturally dispersed, and bring them together into society.

— To migrate, &c.] To depart from the woods and forests, the antient abodes of the earliest ages, where men lived in common with the beasts, and to coalesce and unite in civil society. See Sat. vi. l. 2—7.

153. To build houses.] For habitation, instead of living in dens and caves, like beasts.

— To join, &c.] To join our houses to one another, for the greater safety and convenience of the whole, against robbers, wild beasts, &c.

155. Threshold.] Limine stands here, per syn. for the house itself.

— A contributed confidence.] That by thus joining houses (the original of cities and towns) each might receive and impart a confidential notion of safety, in the night-time particularly, when men sleep, and, of course, are most exposed to dangers.

— To protect with arms, &c.] To protect in war, from the hands of the enemy, a fellow-citizen who had fallen, or was reeling with loss of blood from wounds.

157. To give signs, &c.] When on an expedition in time of war,

Might command us to seek, and to afford help: 150

To draw the dispersed into a people, to migrate from the old

Forest, and to leave woods inhabited by our ancestors:

To build houses, to join to our habitations

Another roof, that safe slumbers, by a neighbouring

Threshold, a contributed confidence might give: to protect with arms 155

A fallen citizen, or one staggering with a great wound:

To give signs with a common trumpet, to be defended with the same

Towers, and to be secured by one key of the gates.

But now the concord of serpents is greater: a similar

Beast spares his kindred spots. When, from a lion, 160

Did a stronger lion take away life? in what forest ever,

Did a boar expire by the teeth of a larger boar?

The Indian tyger observes perpetual peace with a fierce

Tyger: there is agreement with savage bears among themselves.

But for man the deadly sword from the impious anvil 165 war, to obey one common signal, given by the trumpet for battle.

158. Towers.] Turris signifies a tower, or any thing like it; so any fortified place.

— Secured by one key, &c.] To be inclosed within the same walls, and locked up in security by the same key of the gates.

The poet, by what he has said, has shewn the great advantages of men above brutes, in having a rational mind, which can direct them to form societies, so that, by mutual help and assistance, they can secure and protect each other. All this is agreeable to the dictates of their common nature, and thus it ought to be; but such is the corruption and depravity of mankind, that, as the poet proceeds to shew, there is little of this to be found; on the contrary, beasts are not so cruel to their own species as men are.

159. Concord of serpents, &c.] These venomous creatures do not hurt their own species; they agree better than men now do with each other.

160. Spare his kindred spots.] The leopard recognizes the leopard, and avoids hurting him, whom he sees, by his spots, to be related to the same species with himself.

165. But, &c.] The poet having, in several instances, shewn the the harmony and agreement which subsist among the most fierce and savage beasts, now proceeds to apply this to his main argument in this place, which is to prove, that the concord between these creatures is greater than is to be found among the human race towards each other; and indeed, that man towards man is now so savage, as to fabricate weapons for their mutual destruction, and this without any remorse or concern.

166. To have produced, &c.] Lit. to have lengthened out deadly iron, &c.—i. e. by drawing it out, with hammering it on the anvil, into the length of a sword, a deadly weapon, and most fatal: the poet therefore calls the anvil on which it is made impious, as being instrumental to the forming this mischievous weapon.

— Is little.] Is now looked upon as a mere trifle.

— Ubxas.] Cùm—although, albeit.

— Being accustomed, &c.] The first smiths set up their trade only to forge instruments of husbandry, and made nothing else. Coquere signifies, here, to heat in the fire. ANSW.

167. Tired with mattocks, &c.] They wearied themselves daily in making hoes or mattocks, or ploughshares, for tillage.

168. Knew not how, &c.] So far from hammering iron into swords, they did not even know how to set about it.

169. We see people, &c.] Meaning the savage Tentyrites before mentioned, who ate human flesh, and looked upon it as a species of ordinary food.

172. Pythagoras.] The famous philosopher, who left his country Samos, then under the tyrant Polycrates, and travelled over India, through Ægypt, in search of knowledge. He forbade the eating animals on account of the transmigration of souls; he would not allow himself to eat all sorts of vegetables, but abstained from beans, which he is supposed to have learnt from the Ægyptian priests, when he was in that country, who abstained from beans, and thought it unlawful to sow or to look upon them. Herodot. Euterpe.

What, says the poet, would Pythagoras have said, if he had seen these Ægyptians, these Tentyrites, tearing and devouring human only to heat,

share,

The first smiths knew not how to beat out swords.

We see people, to whose anger it does not suffice

They believed to be a kind of food. What therefore would he have said,

Or whither would he not have fled, if now Pythagoras could have seen

human flesh? to what part of the earth would not he have flown, to have avoided such a sight? who, so far from holding it lawful to eat human flesh, would not eat the flesh of any animal any more than he would have eaten the flesh of a man, nor would he indulge his appetite with every kind of vegetable.

The reason of this strange piece of superstition, of abstinence from beans, is not known; many causes have been assigned for it, which are full as absurd as the thing itself. The reader may find many of these collected in Holyday, note 14, on this Satire.
See also Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. i. p. 53.

According to a story in his life, written by Iamblichus, we may suppose that neither Pythagoras, nor any of his followers, would ever reveal the cause of abstinence from beans.—It seems that Dionysius the tyrant, the younger, desiring to know the secret, caused two Pythagoreans to be brought before him, a man and his wife, who being asked, “why the Pythagoreans would “not eat beans?”—“I will sooner die (said the man) than “reveal it.”—This, though threatened with tortures, he persisted in, and was, with indignation, sent away. The wife was then called upon, and being asked the same question, and threatened also with tortures, she, rather than reveal it, bit out her tongue, and spit it in the tyrant's face. Of Pythagoras,

END OF THE FIFTEENTH SATIRE.

SATIRA

S A T I R A XVI.

A R G U M E N T.

This Satire is supposed to have been written by Juvenal while he commanded in Egypt; (see Sat. xv. l. 45, note 2.) He sets forth, ironically, the advantages and privileges of the soldiery, and how happy they are beyond others whom he mentions.

Many have thought that this Satire was not written by Juvenal; but I think that the weight of evidence seems

QUIS numerare queat felicis præmia, Galle, Militiæ? nam si subeantur prospera castra,
 Me pavidum excipiat tyronem porta secundo
 Sidere: plus etenim fati valet hora benigni,
 Quàm si nos Veneris commendet epistola Marti, 5
 Et Samiâ genitrix quæ delectatur arenâ.

Line 1. Gallus.] Who this was does not appear; some friend, doubtless, of Juvenal, to whom he addresses this Satire.

— Can number, &c.] i. e. Can reckon up the advantages and emoluments arising from a military life?

2. Prosperous camps, &c.] Where people make their fortunes.

3. Let the door.] Let my first entrance be attended with the good omen of some favourable star. It was a great notion among the Romans, that their good or ill fortune depended on the situation of the stars, at certain times, and on certain occasions. Sat. vii. l. 194, note.

— A fearful beginner.] Tyro signifies a fresh-water soldier, a young beginner, a novice; these are usually fearful at first, being unused to the fatigues and hazards of war.

It is to be remembered, that Juvenal, who had passed his life in the study of letters, and in writing, was sent away from Rome against that opinion, and that there are many passages so exactly in the style of Juvenal, as to afford the strongest internal evidence that it was written by him. It may be granted not to be a finished piece, like the rest; but if we only regard it as a draught or design of a larger work, it is a valuable hint on the oppression and inconveniences of a military government.

WHO, O Gallus, can number the advantages of the into Egypt, under pretence of giving him a military command, but indeed to exile him, for having satirized Paris the player, a minion of Domitian. See Sat. vii. l. 92, note. This was in a very advanced stage of our poet's life; therefore, though an old man, he might properly call himself a young soldier, unskilled and fearful.

4. An hour of kind fate, &c.] One lucky hour under the influence of some friendly planet. See Hor. Lib. ii. Ode xvii. l. 17, & seq.

5. Epistle of Venus, &c.] Than if Venus, the mistress of the god of war, were to write him a recommendatory letter in my favour, and this to be seconded by another from his mother Juno, here meant by genitrix. The poet, in this place, is again sneering at the mythology of his country. Comp. Sat. xiii. l. 40—7.

6. Delights in the Samian land.] Juno was worshipped at Samos,

Commoda tractemus primùm communia, quorum
 Haud minimum illud erit, ne te pulsare Togatus
 Audeat: imo etsi pulsetur, dissimulet, nec
 Audeat excussos Prætori ostendere dentes, 10
 Et nigram in facie tumidis livoribus offam, mos, a sandy island in the Icarian Sea, where she was educated and married to Jupiter: she was said to have a great delight in this island. See Æn. i. l. 19, 20.

7. Let us first treat common advantages.] The poet now enters on his subject; and begins, first, with those privileges of the military, which are common to all of them, from the highest to the lowest.

8. A gownsmen.] Any common Roman, called togatus from wearing a gown; as a soldier is called armatus, from wearing arms—l. 34, post.

9. May not dare.] No common man dare strike you if you are a soldier.

— Tho' he.] Though he should be ever so beaten by you.

— Let him dissemble.] Let him conceal it; let him counterfeit, and pretend, that he came by the marks, which the soldier's blows have left, some other way.

10. Nor dare to shew, &c.] Though the soldier has knocked the man's teeth out of his head, yet let not the man dare to complain to the superior officer, or shew his mangled mouth.

— Prætor.] The prætor militaris was the general, or commander in chief. See AINSW. Prætor.

11. Black lump, &c.] His face beat black and blue, as we say, and full of lumps and swellings.

12. And eyes left, &c.] His eyes left in such a condition, as to make it impossible for the surgeon to promise a recovery of them.

13. A Bardiac judge.] Bardiacus, or Bardaicus, a military judge, something like our judge advocate in the army, who had the sole cognizance of all military causes, and of such as arose within the camp: so called from Bardi, an antient people of Gaul, who wore a particular sort of dress, that was adopted by the Romans, and used by the military. This judge, being of the army, wore this dress, and therefore is called Bardiacus, which

things,

A shoe, and large buskins at the great benches.

which signifies, of the country of Gaul, or dressed like Gauls.
ANSW.

13. Willing to punish, &c.] If a man will venture to complain, he will be referred to the tribunal of the military judge.

14. A shoe, &c.] Calceus signifies any shoe, but probably means here a particular shoe worn by soldiers, which, like those of our rustics, was filled with nails at the bottom. See Sat. iii. 247—8, note.

— Large buskins.] These seem to have been the upper parts of the caligæ, as the lower were the calcei, or shoes; for the caliga, being a sort of harness for the foot and leg, the lower part, or calceus, covered the foot, the upper part, or sura, reached up to the calf of the leg: they were like our half boots, and in the front had the figure of a lion, or some fierce beast.

— At the great benches.] The benches on which the superior magistrates sat were called tribunalia, those on which the lower magistrates sat were called subsellia; so that the epithet magna, here, is probably ironical.

The poet means, that the complainant is referred to a military judge, who takes his seat on the bench in his military habit.

15. Laws of camps.] These complaints were not tried by the civil laws and institutions, but by the old military laws.

— The custom of Camillus.] L. Furius Camillus, during the ten years siege of Veii, a city of Tuscany, famous for the slaughter of the Fabii there, made a law, that no soldier should be impleaded without the camp, or at a distance from the standard, that he might always be on the spot in case of an engagement:

Servato, miles ne vallum litiget extrâ,
 Et procul à signis. Justissima Centurionum Cognitio est igitur de milite; nec mihi deerit
 Ultio, si justæ defertur causa querelæ :
 Tota cohors tamen est inimica, omnesque manipuli 20
 Consensu magno efficiunt, curabit ut sit Vindicta & gravior quàm injuria. dignum erit ergo
 Declamatoris Mutinensis corde Vagelli,
 Cùm duo crura habeas, offendere tot caligatos, Millia clavorum. Quis tam procul absit ab urbe? 25 so that if a man received an injury, as in the case above put, from a soldier, he could prosecute him no where but before the military judge, and that by the martial law.

17. Most just is therefore, &c.] The igitur, here, relates to what the poet mentions in the preceding lines, concerning the trial of a soldier, which was ordained to be before a military tribunal; no other had cognizance of the cause where a soldier was party.—Now as this was ordained by law, and to prevent the military from being absent at a distance from the camp, in case of a sudden attack from an enemy, and, for this reason, must be for the public good and safety, therefore it must be deemed highly proper and just.

18. Nor will revenge, &c.] q. d. Though a centurion be judge, yet where I, supposing myself a common person, who prosecute a soldier on good and reasonable grounds, really make out my cause to be true and just, I shall have sentence in my favour, and, as far as the judge is concerned, I shall be avenged of my adversary: but notwithstanding this—

20. The whole cohort.] The whole regiment, as it were, will be against the man who complains against a soldier.

— All the companies.] Manipuli, for manipuli, of which there were ten in a regiment, and answer to our companies of foot.—Here may be meant all the common soldiers.

Manipulus was a small band of soldiers, which, in the days of Romulus, when the Roman army was but in a poor condition, tied an handful of hay or grass to the top of a spear, and carried it by way of ensign. We have adopted this term, and often call a small detachment of soldiers an handful of men.

21. Obstruēt.] i. e. The course of justice.

— With great consent.] With the most hearty and earnest united opposition; so that, if you should have the centurion, who tries the cause, on your side, his sentence can't be carried into execution.

Being observed, that a soldier should not litigate without the trench,

And far from the standards. Most just is therefore the trial
Of centurions concerning a soldier; nor will revenge

Be wanting to me, if a cause of just complaint be brought:
Yet the whole cohort is inimical, and all the companies 20 Obstruct with great consent. You will take care, that there be

Vengeance, heavier than the injury. It will, therefore, be worthy

The heart of the declaimer Vagellius of Mutina,
Since you have two legs, to offend so many common soldiers,
Thousands of nails. Who can be so far from the city? 25

• execution for fear of a mutiny, the soldiers banding together as one man to oppose it.

21. You will take care, &c.] You soldiers (tota cohors—omnesque manipuli) will take care, that vengeance, even heavier than the injury complained of, shall await the plaintiff, and that he shall find the remedy worse than the disease. Comp. l. 24, and note.

23. The heart of Vagellius, &c.] Therefore the man who could affront a soldier, or sue him for an injury, and attempt to plead his cause against him, must have the resolution and impudence of that brawling lawyer of Mutina (hodie Modena) who, for a fee, would undertake the most dangerous and desperate causes.

24. Since you have two legs] (which are now safe and sound) to be objects of mischief to the soldiers, who will kick your shins with their clouted shoes, and break them.

— Common soldiers.] Caligatos—having the caliga on their feet and legs stuck full of nails and spikes, hence called caligati.
See Sat. iii. 322, 248, and notes.

25. Thousands of nails.] Each soldier having a great number.

— So far from the city?] Who can be so foolish and ignorant, so unacquainted with the ways of the world, and especially with the manners of the soldiery, as to venture upon any quarrel with a soldier?—Quis tam procul absit ab urbe?—q. d. Who can be so ignorant of the world?

The expression seems proverbial: the people in a town, or great city, as Rome was, must be supposed to know mankind better

ter than rustics, who live in the country, and are usually raw and ignorant; hence called inurbani, rude, simple, homely.

So the Greeks used the word ἀστυς (from ἀστύ, a city, particularly Athens) to denote a sharp man, well acquainted with the ways of the world; answering, in a great measure, to the English word politic, which is from the Latin politicus, and this from Gr. πολις, a city.

26. So much a Pylades.] So much like Pylades; alluding to Pylades, the friend of Orestes, who underwent all dangers with him and for him, and even exposed his life for him, when he went to Taurica to expiate his crimes at the altar of Diana Taurica. See Euripid. Iphigen. in Tauris.

Whom, beside all I have been saying of your own personal dangers from the soldiery, could you find such a friend, as to expose his safety for your sake, and enter within the camp to plead your cause, or to take your part?

— Mole of the rampart.] The Romans used to surround their encampments with vast heaps or banks of earth, thrown up by way of rampart. The mass of earth which formed this might properly be called moles aggeris. A person could not get into the camp without first passing this.—Who would, says the poet, venture beyond this for your sake?

27. Let tears, &c.] Cease to implore with tears your friends to help you.

28. About to excuse themselves.] "Forbear to solicit your friends, who, instead of complying with such a request, will find a thousand excuses for not complying with your solicitations.

29. When the judge says, &c.] But suppose you could prevail on a friend to go with you, to be a witness for you in the cause, who

That he would come? let tears immediately be dried up,

When the judge says—"Give evidence:" let him dare,
(I know not who) who saw the blows, say—"I saw," 30
And I will believe him worthy the beard, and worthy the locks,

Of our ancestors; you might sooner produce a false witness Against a villager, than one speaking what is true
Against the fortune of a soldier, and against his reputation.

Now other advantages, and other emoluments, let us
note 35

Of oaths. A dale of my ancestral estate, saw you beaten by the soldier, and suppose the judge calls on the cause, and bids you produce your evidence; let any man (I know not who—I name nobody) but let me see the man who dares to swear publicly in court that he saw the blows given—

31. Worthy the beard, &c.] I will allow him to be a man of primitive virtue, fidelity, and courage; such as resided in our great ancestors, who knew not our modern effeminacy; they neither shaved their beards, nor cut their hair.

32. You might sooner produce, &c.] Paganus, literally, signifies one in, or of, the country, or country village; here it is used in contradistinction to a soldier. It is more easy to bring a false accusation, and support it by false testimony, against such a one, than to bring a true accusation, and to support it by true testimony, against either the property or honour of a soldier—armati.—See ante, l. 8, note.

36. Of oaths.] When soldiers were enlisted, they took an oath of allegiance and fidelity to the emperor, to their country, and to their general.

Now, says Juvenal, let us consider some farther privileges of taking the oaths as a soldier, and, by this, being enrolled in the army.

— A dale.] Convallis signifies a vale or valley, inclosed on both sides with hills, commonly the most fruitful part of an estate. See Pl. lxx. 13.

— My ancestral estate.] My family-estate, descended to me from my ancestors.—He speaks as a common person.

Improbus, aut campum mihi si vicinus ademit ;
 Aut sacrum effodit medio de limite faxum,
 Quod mea cum vetulo coluit puls annua libo,
 Debitor aut sumptos pergit non reddere nummos, 40
 Vana supervacui dicens chirographa ligni ;

 Cæditio, & Fusco jam micturiente, parati

37. Or a field.] Some other favourite spot.
 If a wicked neighbour hath by violence entered and disseised me of these.

38. Hath dug up, &c.] If he hath removed my boundary.
 The stones which were set up for boundaries were held sacred ;
 they adorned them with chaplets, and every year offered to the god Terminus, on the top of the boundary-stones, sacrifices of honey, meal, and oil, made into cakes. This composition was called puls. See ANSW.—And the cakes, liba. See lb. libum.

— Middle border.] i. e. Which stood on the line between my estate and my neighbours. It was always reckoned a grievous offence to remove a land-mark ; it was expressly forbidden in the divine law—Deut. xxvii. 17.

39. An old cake.] This institution of a yearly sacrifice to the god Terminus, the god of boundaries, was as old as the days of Numa Pompilius, the successor of Romulus.

40. A debtor goes on, &c.] A man that has borrowed a sum of money continues to refuse the payment.

41. Saying the hand-writings, &c.] Denying the validity of his bond. See Sat. xiii. 137, note.

42. The year, &c.] There were judges, or commissioners, chosen to hear certain civil causes among the people, of whom every tribe had three : there being thirty-five tribes in Rome, there were, of course, one hundred and five judges, though named centumviri, from the greater number.

By the year, annus, here, we are to understand a certain time of the year, when these judges sat to try causes ; what we should call term-time. Annus properly signifies a circle, whence annulus, a ring. Being applied to time, it denotes the annual progress of the sun through the twelve signs of the Zodiac, which we call a year ; but it may also denote the revolution of any certain time.

Or a field, if a wicked neighbour has taken away from me ;
 Or hath dug up the sacred stone from the middle border,
 Which my annual puls hath rever'd with an old cake :
 Or a debtor goes on not to render money taken, 40
 Saying the hand-writings of the useless wood are void ;
 The year of the whole people; which will begin suits,
 Will be to be waited for : but, then also, a thousand fatigues
 Are to be borne, a thousand delays ; so often the benches are only Spread. Now eloquent Cæditius laying by his garments, 45
 And Fuscus now making water, prepared
 We depart, and fight in the slow sand of the forum.

42. Of the whole people.] Totius populi—i. e. when the courts were open to the people at large, that they might get their causes heard and decided.

— Begin suits.] The time of year when the centumviri will open their commission, and begin to try causes, must be waited for—this may occasion much delay.

43—4. Fatigues—delays.] When the term is begun, and the cause is ready for hearing, there is no end of the delays, and of the uneasinesses which these occasion. Tædium signifies irksomeness, weariness.

44. So often the benches, &c.] It so often happens that the seats are prepared for the judges, and they don't attend. Sternuntur may here signify the spreading the benches for the judges with cushions, or the like. See AINSW. Subsellium, N° 2.

45. Laying by his garments.] Lacerna signifies a cloak, a riding coat, and various other species of garments—but here, the robes or dress of the judges. One judge, says the poet, lays by his garments ; meaning perhaps that he goes out of court to do this, complaining that he can't bear the heat.—Of Cæditius, see Sat. xiii. 197, note.

46. Fuscus, &c.] Aurelius Fuscus, noted by Martial as a very drunken fellow.—He is always going out of court to get rid of his liquor.

— Prepared.] That is, for the hearing.

47. We depart.] By the strange avocations of the judges for different purposes, the day passes without the cause being tried, and the parties are forced to go away as they came.

— The slow sand, &c.] A metaphor, taken from gladiators. See Sat. ii. 143, note 2, ad fin.—lentâ arenâ fori—for arenâ lenti fori. Hypall.—q. d. We, the litigating parties,

Ast illis, quos arma tegunt, & balteus ambit,

 Nec res atteritur longo sufflamine litis, 50

 Ut qui fortis erit, sit felicissimus idem ;
 Ut læti phaleris omnes, & torquibus omnes. 60 carry on our contention in a slow dilatory manner, seeing no end of the vexation and delay of the court.

48. Whom arms cover, &c.] q. d. But as for the soldiery, they meet with none of these disappointments—they may bring on their cause when they please.

50. Nor is the affair worn, &c.] Their cause is not delayed from time to time, till the matter grows stale, and wears away by length of procrastination. Or res, here, may signify estate, goods, fortune ; and we may explain the poet to mean, that they are not ruined in their fortunes, as others are, by the expences of dilatory proceedings, by long and vexatious delays.

— Long impediment.] Sufflamine. Metaph. See Sat. viii. l. 148, note.

51. A will, &c.] By the laws of Rome, a son, during the life of his father, could not dispose of his effects by will.—Soldiers were excepted, so that their last wills were valid, though made during the father's life, and though they even excluded the father from any share of their effects which they bequeathed : but this related only to what they got by their military services. This was called peculium castrense.

53. Was thought good, &c.] Placuit—it pleased the legislature to ordain, that what was gotten by the toils of war, should not be looked on as a part of, or incorporated with, their private fortune, over the whole of which the father had a power, so that they could not dispose of it by will in his life-time.

54. Coranus.] Some valiant soldier, who had made a large fortune in the wars.

55. An attendant of banners.] Who had followed and fought under the Roman banners.

55. Earning

But to them, whom arms cover, and a belt goes round,
 What time of trial they please, to them is afforded :
 Nor is the affair worne out by a long impediment of the cause. 50

Moreover, a right of making a will is given to soldiers alone,

The father living. For what things are gotten by the labour
 Of warfare, it was thought good should not be in the body of the estate,

The whole government of which the father possesses.
 Therefore, Coranus,

Anattendant of banners, and earning the money of camps; 55
 His father, tho' trembling, besets. Just labour Promotes this man, and renders its rewards to his glorious toil.
 This certainly seems to be a concern of the general himself,
 That he who shall be brave, the same may be most happy,
 That all should be glad with trappings, and all with collars. 60

55. Earning the money of camps.] Receiving his pay, and sharing the booty when enemies were defeated and plundered.

56. His father, tho' trembling.] An old man trembling with age, and not long for this world.

— Besets.] Captat—wheedles him, in hopes of being his heir. See Sat. x. l. 202, and note.

— Just labour, &c.] A diligent and faithful discharge of his duty as a soldier, has advanced this man to affluence and rank.

57. And render'd, &c.] And has amply rewarded all the glorious pains which he has taken in the service of his country.

58. This certainly, &c.] q.d. It should certainly be the principal study of a general to promote and reward the brave; and that they who render the greatest services to their country, by their valour, should be most happy. See ANSW. Refero, No 5.

Referre ipsius ducis is of difficult construction, but seems equivalent to referre ad ipsum ducem.

For 'tis a noble general's prudent part,
 To cherish valour and reward desert. DRYDEN.

60. Should be glad, &c.] Should rejoice in being distinguished by military honours.

60. Trappings.] Phalaræ -arum—some ornaments worn by men of arms, who had distinguished themselves.

— Collars.] Or chains of gold, worn about the necks of those whose valour and services in the army had rendered them worthy of military honours.

q. d. It should be the peculiar care of the general, that all who have distinguished themselves by their services under him should be made happy, by bearing those military honours about them, which are the rewards of military valour, and which tend to its encouragement.—Quis enim virtutem amplectitur ipsam, præmia si tollas?—See Sat. x. l. 141—2.

Having now finished my task, as far as JUVENAL is concerned, I have to lament, that it has not been in my power to represent this great poet in all the beauty and excellence of his composition; these can only be known to men of letters, who can read and understand him in the original. If the homely dress, in which he must necessarily appear in a literal translation, shall be found to have its use in leading my readers to a correct interpretation of the Latin, I may venture to suppose that I have done all that can be expected from it; taste and genius must do the rest; these alone can assimilate the imagination to that of the poet, so as to enable the reader to enter fully into the propriety, elegance, and beauty of his language; as a real inclination to what is right and commendable, can alone dispose us to embrace that system of virtuous conduct, which is so highly commended, and to shun, with indignation and abhorrence, that system of vice and profligacy, so strongly delineated, and so severely reprobated in the preceding Satires.

NEW AND LITERAL TRANSLATION OF THE SATIRES
AULUS PERSIUS FLACCUS.

By the REV. M. MADAN.

Mordaci raders vero.

SAT. i. l. 107.

P R E F A C E.

AULUS Persius Flaccus was born at Volaterræ, in Etruria (now Tuscany), about the twentieth year of the Emperor Tiberius, that is to say, about two years after the death of Christ. Flaccus, his father, was a Roman knight, whom he lost when he was but six years of age. His mother, Fulvia Sissenia, afterward married one Fufius, a Roman knight, and within a few years buried him also. Our Poet studied, till the age of twelve years, at Volaterræ; he then came to Rome, where he put himself under the instruction of Remmius Palæmon, a grammarian, and Virginius Flaccus, a rhetorician; to each of which he paid the highest attention. At sixteen he made a friendship with Annæus Cornutus (by country an African, by profession a Stoic philosopher) from whom he got an insight into the Stoic philosophy. By means of Cornutus he became acquainted with Annæus Lucanus, who so admired the writings of Persius, that on hearing him read his verses, he could scarcely refrain from crying out publicly, that " they were absolute poems."

P R E F A C E.

He was a young man of gentle manners, of great modesty, and of remarkable sobriety and frugality: dutiful and affectionate towards his mother, loving and kind to his sisters; a most strenuous friend and defender of virtue—an irreconcilable enemy to vice in all its shapes, as may appear from his Satires, which came from his masterly pen in an early time of life, when dissipation, lewdness, and extravagance, were cultivated and followed by so many of his age, and when, instead of making them his associates, he made them the objects of his severest animadversion.

He died of a disorder in his stomach about the thirtieth year of his age, and left behind him a large fortune; the bulk of which he bequeathed to his mother and sisters; leaving an handsome legacy to his friend and instructor Cornutus, together with his study of books: Cornutus only accepted the books, and gave the money, which Persius had left him, to the surviving sisters of Persius.

Some have supposed, that Persius studied obscurity in his Satires, and that to this we owe the difficulty of unravelling his meaning; that he did this, that he might with the greater safety attack and expose the vicious of his day, and particularly the Emperor Nero, at whom some of his keenest shafts were aimed: however this may be, I have endeavoured to avail myself of the explanations which the learned have given, in order to facilitate the forming my own judgment, which, whether coincident with theirs or not, I have freely set down

down in the following notes, in order that my readers may the more easily form theirs.

As to the comparisons which have been made, between Horace, Persius, and Juvenal (the former of which is so often imitated by Persius), I would refer the reader to Mr. Dryden's Dedication to the Earl of Dorset, which is prefixed to the translation of Juvenal and Persius, by himself and others, and where this matter is very fully considered. For my own part, I think it best to allow each his particular merit, and to avoid the invidious and disagreeable task of making comparisons, where each is so excellent, and wherein prejudice and fancy too often supersede true taste and sound judgment.

However the comparative merit of Persius may be determined, his positive excellence can hardly escape the readers of his Satires, or incline them to differ from Quintilian, who says, of him—Inst. Orator. Lib. x. cap. i.—“Multum & veræ gloriæ, quamvis uno “libro Persius meruit.”

Martial seems of this opinion, Lib. iv. Epig. xxviii. l. 7, 8.

“Sæpius in libro memoratur Persius uno,

“Quam levis in totâ Marsus Amazonide.”

On which the Scholiast observes, by way of note—

“Gratior est parvus liber Satirarum Persii, quam “ingens volumen Marfi, quo bellum Herculis “scripsit contra Amazonas.”

Nor were the Satires of Persius in small esteem, even

"The design of the Author was to conceal his name and quality.—He lived in the dangerous times of Nero, and aims particularly at him in most of his Satires: for which reason, though he was of equestrian dignity, and of a plentiful fortune, he would appear, in this Prologue, but a beggarly

Line 1. Caballine fountain.] A fountain near Helicon, a hill in Bœotia, sacred to the Muses and Apollo, which the horse Pegasus is said to have opened with his hoof: therefore sometimes called Hippocrene, from the Gr. ἵππος, an horse, and Κρηνη, a fountain.

The poet in derision calls it caballinus, from caballus, which is a name for a sorry horse, a jade, a packhorse, and the like.

The poets feigned, that drinking of this sacred fountain inspired, as it were, poetic fancy, imagination, and abilities.—Thus Virg. Æn. vii. 641; and Æn. x. 163.

Pandite nunc Heliconæ, Deæ, cantusque movete.

Perfius means to ridicule this notion.

2. Have dreamed, &c.] Parnassus is a mountain of Phocis, in Achaia, in which is the Castalian spring, and temple of Apollo. It was a notion, that whosoever ascended this hill, and staid there for any time, immediately became a poet. It hath two tops, Cyrrha and Nisa, or, as others, Helicon and Cytheron, the former sacred to Apollo and the Muses, the latter to Bacchus. Hence our poet says—bicipiti Parnasso.

poet, who writes for bread. After this he breaks into the business of the First Satire, which is chiefly to decry the poetry then in fashion, and the impudence of those who were endeavouring to pass their stuff upon the world."

DRYDEN.

I HAVE neither moistened my lips with the Caballine fountain,
 Nor to have dreamed in two-headed Parnassus,
 Do I remember, that thus I should suddenly come forth a poet.
 Both the Heliconides, and pale Pirene,
 I leave to those, whose images the pliant ivy-boughs 5

He is supposed to allude to the poet Ennius, who is said to have dreamed that he was on Mount Parnassus, and that the soul of Homer entered into him.

3. Suddenly.] i. e. All on a sudden—without any pains or study—by immediate inspiration, as it were.

4. Heliconides.] The Muses, so called from Helicon. See l. 1, note.

— Pirene.] Pirene was another fountain near Corinth, sacred to the Muses; so called from Pirene, the daughter of Achelous, who is fabled to have wept forth from her eyes the fountain called by her name. The epithet pale, may refer to the complexion of Pirene pale with grief: or, as some think, is to be understood figuratively, to denote the paleness of those poets who studied and laboured hard to make their verses. See Sat. i. l. 124, and note.

5. Those, whose images, &c.] The poet feigns himself to be an untutored rustic, and to write merely from his own rude genius, without those assistances which others have derived from the Muses and the sacred fountains: these, says he, I leave to such great men as have their images set up in the temple of the Muses, and crowned with ivy, in token of honour.

Hederæ sequaces. Ipse semipaganus

Me doctarum hederæ præmia frontium
Diis miscent superis.

HOR. Ode i. Lib. i. l. 29, 30.

5. The pliant ivy.] The ivy bends, and entwines whatever it is planted against, and may be said to follow the form and bent thereof: hence the epithet sequaces. So, when gathered and made into chaplets, it follows exactly the circular form of the head on which it is placed, easily bending and entwining it. Some think that sequaces, here, intimates its following distinguished poets as their reward.

6. Touch softly.] Lambo properly signifies to lick with the tongue—hence, to touch gently or softly.

— I, half a clown.] See above, note on l. 5.

7. Consecrated repositories, &c.] i. e. The temple of Apollo and the Muses, built by Augustus on Mount Palatine, where the works of the poets were kept and recited. See Juv. Sat. i. l. 1, note.

8. Who has expedited, &c.] Expedit—lit. hastened.—q. d. Who has made a parrot so ready at speaking the word χαῖρε. This, like salve, ave, or the like, was a salutation among the ancients at meeting or parting: this they taught their parrots, or magpies, who used to utter them, as ours are frequently taught to speak some similar common word. See Mart. Lib. xiv. Ep. 73, 76.

9. Teach magpies, &c.] The magpie, as we daily see, is another bird which is often taught to speak.

11. The belly.] i. e. Hunger, which is the teacher of this, as of many other arts—the giver of genius and capacity—skillful and cunning to follow after the most difficult attainments from which it can hope for relief to its cravings.

Touch softly. I, half a clown,
Bring my verse to the consecrated repositories of the poets.

Who has expedited to a parrot his χαιρ?
And taught magpies to attempt our words?
A master of art, and a liberal bestower of genius, 10
The belly, cunning to follow denied words.

But if the hope of deceitful money should glitter,
Raven-poets, and magpie-poetesses,
You may imagine to sing Pegaseian melody.

11. Cunning.] Artífex -icis, adj. See AINSW.

— Denied words.] This hunger is a great artist in this way, of teaching birds to utter human language, which naturally is denied them.

The birds are, in a manner, starved into this kind of erudition, the masters of them keeping them very sharp, and rewarding them with a bit of food, when they shew a compliance with their endeavours, from time to time. On this principle we have, in our day, seen wonderful things, quite foreign to the nature of the animals, taught to horses, dogs, and even to swine.

The poet means, that as parrots and magpies are starved into learning to speak, which by nature is denied them, so the scribblers, which he here intends to satirize, are driven into writing verses, by their poverty and necessity, without any natural genius or talents whatsoever.

12. If the hope, &c.] These poor poets, who are without all natural genius, and would therefore never think of writing; yet, such is their poverty, that if they can once encourage themselves to hope for a little money by writing, they will instantly set about it.

— Deceitful money.] Money may, on many accounts, deserve the epithet here given it. But here, in particular, it is so called, from its deceiving these scribblers into doing what they are not fit for, and by doing of which they expose themselves to the utmost contempt and derision.

13. Raven-poets, &c.] Once let the gilded bait come in view, you will hear such a recital of poetry, as would make you think that ravens and magpies were turned poets and poetesses, and had been taught to recite their performances.

14. Pegaseian melody.] They do this with so much effrontery, that instead of the wretched stuff which they produce, you would think they were reciting something really poetical and sublime, as if they had drunk of Hippocrene itself (see above, note on l. 1.) or had mounted and soared aloft on the winged Pegasus.

This Satire opens in form of a dialogue between Persius and a friend.—We may suppose Persius to be just seated in his study, and beginning to vent his indignation in satire. An acquaintance comes in, and, on hearing the first line, dissuades the poet from an undertaking so dangerous; advising him, if he must write, to accommodate his vein to the taste of the times, and to write like other people.

Persius acknowledges, that this would be the means of gaining applause; but adds, that the approbation of such pa-

Line 1. O the cares, &c.] Persius is supposed to be reading this line, the first of the Satire which he had composed, when his friend is entering and overhears it. Comp. Eccl. i. 2, 14.

2. Who will read these?] says his friend to him—i. e. Who, as the present taste at Rome is, will trouble themselves to read a work which begins with such serious reflections? Your very first line will disgust them—they like nothing but trifles.

—Do you say that, &c.] Do you say that to me and my writings?

—Nobody.] Yes I do, and aver that you will not have a single reader; nay, I will swear it by Hercules—an usual oath among the Romans.

3. Perhaps

trons as this compliance would recommend him to, was a thing not to be desired.

After this, he exposes the wretched taste which then prevailed in Rome, both in verse and prose, and shews what sad stuff the nobles wrote themselves, and encouraged in others. He laments that he dares not speak out, as Lucilius and Horace did—but it is no very difficult matter to perceive that he frequently aims at the emperor Nero.

He concludes, with a contempt of all blockheads, and says, that the only readers, whose applause he courts, must be men of virtue and sense.

P E R S I U S. M O N I T O R.

P. O The cares of men! O how much vanity is there in things!—

M. Nobody, truly. P. Nobody?

M. Perhaps two, perhaps nobody; it is a shameful and lamentable thing. P. Wherefore?

Left Polydamas and the Troiads should prefer Labeo

3. Perhaps two, &c.] It may be, replies the friend, that here and there a few readers may be found; but I rather think that even this will not be the case: I grant this to be very hard, after the pains which you have bestowed, and very shameful.

— Wherefore?] Wherefore do you call it a miserable, or a shameful thing, not to have my writings read? Are you afraid that I should be uneasy, at seeing my performances thrown aside, and those of a vile scribbler preferred?

4. Polydamas and the Troiads, &c.] The poet dares not speak out, out, therefore designs Nero and the Romans, under the feigned names of Polydamas and the Trojans, in allusion to Hector's fearing the reproaches of Polydamas (the son-in-law of Priam, and who is said to have betrayed Troy to the Greeks) and of the Trojan men and women, if he retired within the walls of Troy. See Il. x. l. 100, 105.

4. Labeo.] A wretched poet, who made a miserable translation of Homer's Iliad. He was a court-poet, and a minion of Nero.

5. Tristes!] So far from its being the miserable thing which you imagine, I look on it as ridiculous and trifling, nor do I trouble my head about it.

— If turbid Rome, &c.] Metaph. from waters, which, by being disturbed, are muddy, thick, turbid, as we say.

If the people of Rome, says the poet, turbid, i. e. muddy, not clear in their judgment, having their minds vexed and disturbed too with what is written against them, disparage any work, and speak lightly of it, through anger and prejudice, I desire you will not agree with them in what they say, or accede to their opinion. The word elevet is metaphorical, and alludes to scales, where that which is lightest is raised up, and signifies undervaluing, disparaging, or, as we say, making light of any thing.

6. Nor correct, &c.] Examen properly signifies the tongue, needle, or beam of a balance, which always inclines toward the side where the weight preponderates—where this does not act truly, and in due proportion, it shews that the balance is false: how false it is, and, of course, how it may be properly judged of and corrected, may be seen, by weighing the same thing in a true scale, or by a true balance; this will exactly discover the deficiency.

The poet, alluding to this, advises his friend not to attempt correcting one false balance by another: he means, that, if any thing should be amiss, which the people in general find fault with, yet it is not to be weighed or considered according to their opinion, which, like a false balance, is erroneous; much less to be corrected by their standard of judgment.

7. Seek not thyself, &c.] i. e. Judge for yourself, by your own conscience and opinion, not by what other people say. The more exact meaning of this Stoical maxim seems to be—You can judge

To me?—trifles!—do not, if turbid Rome should disparage 5

Any thing, agree with it, nor correct a false balance

By that scale: seek not thyself out of thyself.

For at Rome who does not—? Ah, if I might say!—But

I may

Then, when I have beheld greyness, and that our grave way judge of yourself better by what passes within you, than by the opinions of others; so, go not out of yourself, in order to draw just and true conclusions concerning yourself. The Stoics maintained, that a wise man should not make other people's opinions, but his own reason, his rule of action.

The conscience is the test of ev'ry mind;
Seek not thyself, without thyself, to find.

DRYDEN.

The poet seems to urge this sentiment upon his friend, in order to guard him against such an attention to popular opinion, as might lead him to assent to it, contrary to his own opinion, judgment, and conscience. In this view, it answers to what he has before said—

—Non, si quid turbida Roma

Elevet, accedas.

L. 5—6.

8. Who does not—?] i. e. Who does not leave his own judgment and conscience out of the question; and suffer himself to be led away by popular opinion? This is an apophoreis: but I think the nam refers us to the preceding sentence to make out the sense. This view of it, furnishes a farther argument against trusting the opinions of others, since even they don't judge for themselves.

—Ah, if I might say!] i. e. Alas! if I were but at liberty to speak out plainly.

—But I may, &c.] Persius lived in the reign of Nero, a dangerous period for writers of satire; he was therefore, as he hints in the preceding line, afraid to speak out: but yet he will not quite refrain; the objects of satire were too many, and too gross, for him to be silent, and therefore he determines to attack them.

9. When I have beheld greyness.] When I have turned my eyes on the grey hairs of old age.

—Our grave way of life.] Vivere, here, for vite, a Græcism—these often occur in Persius.

When I behold, says the poet, the gravity and austerity with which we appear to live.

10. Whatever we do, &c.] The manner in which people employ themselves, as soon as they have left their playthings, and are become men.

Nuces, lit. nuts—and tali, little square stones, or bones with four sides—were the usual playthings of children. The nucēs were little balls of ivory, or round stones. See FRANCIS, Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 172.—Hence nucibus relictis, signifies ceasing to be children. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 171—2.

11. Relish of uncles, &c.] Patruus is a father's brother, on whom sometimes the care of children devolved on the loss of their father. The father's brother, thus having the authority of a father, without the tenderness and affection of a father, was apt to be very rigid and severe: this was so much the case, as almost to become proverbial; hence patruus signified a severe, rigid reprover. See AINSW.—Hence Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 87—8.

—Sive ego pravè,
 Seu rectè hoc volui, ne sis patruus mihi.

Comp. Lib. iii. Ode xii. l. 3, where we find—

See also the note there, in edit. Delph.

The poet's meaning seems to be as follows—

“When I consider the vanity and folly in which we Romans (he speaks in the first person, as if he meant to include himself, to avoid offence) are employed, from our first becoming men to our old age, and, at the same time, that pretended and assumed gravity and severity which we put on, in so much that we have the relish or savour of morose uncle-guardians in our reproofs of others, and in our carriage towards them, though we are in truth as vain and foolish as those whom we reprove, then, then, I think I may be forgiven if I write and publish my Satires, when the times so evidently stand in need of reproof.”

—I will not] says the friend—All you say does not convince me that you should publish your Satires.

12. What shall I do?] says Persius—How can I contain myself? how can I controul my natural temper and disposition?

—A great laughter.] Cachinno -onis, from cachinnus, a loud laughing, a laughter in derision or scorn. AINSW.

—A petulant spleen.] The spleen, or milt, was looked upon

And whatever we do after our playthings are left; 10

M. I will not.

P. What shall I do? for I am a great laughter with a petulant spleen.

upon by the ancients to be the organ of laughter. See CHAMBERS, tit. Spleen. Also the receptacle of the atrabilious, or melancholic humour. Hence when people are low-spirited or melancholy, they are said to be splenetic; so when they are disgusted and out of humour. Thus Swift, in his City Shower, “Saunt’ring in coffee-house is Dulman seen,

“Rails on the climate and complains of spleen.”

Our poet gives his friend to understand, that he can’t take his advice to suppress his Satires; for that his spleen, which is of the petulant kind, and his natural disposition to laugh at the follies of men, make it impossible for him to resist the temptation of publishing.

13. We write shut up.] Persius having expressed his turn for satire, from his natural disposition, and having asked his friend what he should do, were he to be silent, and lay by his intention of writing—the friend gives him to understand, that he may indulge his desire for writing, without writing satires—“Do as others do, who indulge their genius for writing on popular and inoffensive subjects, some in verse, others in prose, shut up in their studies, for their greater quiet and privacy, where they compose something in a grand and lofty style.”—“Aye,” says Persius, interrupting him, “so grand, as to require a very large portion of breath to last through their periods and sentences, which are too bombast and long-winded to be read by ordinary lungs.” The speaker uses the first person plural—scribimus inclusive—we—nous autres (as the French say). By this mode of speech, the pointedness and personality of what is said are much lessened; consequently the prejudice and offence with which a more direct charge on the persons meant would have been received.

writing, which is free from the shackles of feet and numbers, by which writers in verse are confined.

14. Something grand—] The speaker is going on with his advice, and in his enforcing it from the examples of the writers of his day; but at the words grande aliquid, Persius interrupts him, as though not able to bear such an epithet as grande, when applied to the bombast and fustian which were daily coming forth in order to catch the applause of the vulgar. In this Persius has, no doubt, a stroke at Nero's writings, some samples of which we meet with in a subsequent part of this Satire, l. 93—5, and l. 99—102.

— Which lungs, &c.] See note on l. 14. The word anhelet is well applied here.—Anhelet signifies to breathe short and with difficulty—to pant, as if out of breath—also to labour in doing a thing—and well denotes the situation of one who was to read aloud the poems and performances in question.

— Large of air.] Capable of containing a very large portion of air, and greatly inflated.

15. Doubtless these to the people, &c.] Persius, as we shall find, by using the second person singular, l. 17, leges, and colueris, l. 18, is not to be understood as confining what he says to the person with whom he is discoursing, but means covertly to attack and expose all the poetasters at Rome, who shut themselves up to compose turgid and bombast poems and declamations, to recite in public, in order to get the applause of their ignorant and tasteless hearers.

The Monitor had said—scribimus, l. 13: hence the poet addresses him particularly, but, no doubt, means to carry his satire to all the vain scribblers of the time, and especially to those who exposed themselves in the ridiculous manner after described; not without a view to the emperor Nero, who was vain of his poetry, and used to recite his poems in public. See my note on l. 134, ad fin. and comp. Juv. viii. 220—30, and notes there.

I would observe, that in the arrangement of the dialogue, v. 13, 14, I have followed Mr. BREWSTER, whose ingenious version of Persius is well worthy the reader's attention.

According to the usual arrangement, whereby scribimus indocti, &c. is given to Persius, he receives no answer to his question, quid faciam, l. 12, but abruptly introduces a new subject; whereas, according to the above method, the Monitor very naturally begins an answer, which introduces the chief subject

White, and lastly with a birth-day fardonyx,
You will read, in a high seat, when with a liquid gargle you have wash'd jest of this Satire, and the Poet as naturally interrupts, at the words grande aliquid, l. 14, in order to pursue it; which he does by describing the vanity and folly of these scribblers, some of whom, at an advanced time of life, when they ought to be wiser, are writing trifling and lascivious poems, and reading them to the people in public; this, with every disgraceful circumstance of dress and manner.

15. Comb'd.] Or crisped, curled, and set in an effeminate style.

— A new gown.] Made, and put on, on the occasion.

16. White.] Albus.—This can't agree with togâ, therefore some refer it to the man himself, as supposing him to look white, or pale, with fear and anxiety, for the success of his poem, and make it equivalent to pallidus.—Hor. Epod. vii. l. 15, says—albus pallor; and albus, in one sense of it, signifies pale or wan. AINSW.

But I do not see why we may not read albus togâ recenti, to denote the person's being clad in a new white garment—lit. white with a new gown.

His hair being first kemb'd and smooth, and then bedight
In a fair comely garment fresh and white. HOLYDAY.

The Romans wore white garments, as a piece of finery, on certain festival occasions, as on a birth-day, and the like. So Ovid—

Scilicet expectas solitum tibi moris honorem, Pendeat ex humeris vestis ut alba meis.

— A birth-day fardonyx.] This species of precious stone, set in a ring, and worn on the finger, was reckoned a piece of finery, which the Romans were very ambitious of displaying. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 142—3.

By a birth-day fardonyx, the poet probably means a present that had been made to the man, on his birth-day, of this ring, which he wore on this occasion. It was usual to send presents to a person on his birth-day. See Juv. Sat. xi. l. 84, note.

17. You will read.] i. e. Rehearse aloud.

— In a high seat.] When authors read their works publicly, they had a sort of desk, or pulpit, raised above the auditory, by which means they could be better seen and heard.

Mobile collueris, patranti fractus oculo.

Hic, neque more probo videas, neque voce serenâ,

Intrant, & tremulo scalpuntur ubi intima versu.

Tun', vetule, auriculis alienis colligis efcas?

Auriculis! quibus & dicas cute perditus, Ohe.

17. Liquid gargle, &c.] Plasma—a gargle, or medicine to prevent or take away hoarseness, and to clear the voice.

18. Movable throat.] Mobilis—i. e. pliant, tractable, easily contracting or dilating, according to the sounds which are to be formed.

— A lascivious eye.] Suiting the lewdness of his look to the obscenity of his subject. See ANSW. Fractus, N° 4, and Patrans, ib.

19. Here.] In such a place, and on such an occasion. The poet having described the reader's dress, preparation, and manner, now describes the effect which he had on his auditory.

— Neither in a modest manner.] But quite the contrary, betraying very indecent emotions.

— Nor with a serene voice.] Nor giving their applause with a calm decency of expression, but with a confused and broken kind of voice, like people agitated with disorderly passions.

20. The great Titi, &c.] The poet in derision calls the Roman nobles Titi, from Titus Tatius, a king of the Sabines: a peace being made between the Sabines and Romans, at the instance of the Sabine women, he became a partner with Romulus in a joint government for five years. Persius means to exhibit a contrast between what the great Romans were in the days of Titus Tatius, and what they were now—hence calls them, ironically, ingentes Titi, the great descendants of Titus Tatius. See Juv. Sat. iii. l. 60, note.

— Tremble.] Are agitated with lust, at hearing the recital of the obscene performance, which enters their very loins, as it were, and irritates their most inward parts.

21. Scratch'd.] i. e. Titillated, irritated.

— Tremulous verse.] With the lascivious verses, which are red with an effeminate, soft, and trembling accent, suited to the nature of the subject.

22. Dost thou, old man, &c.] Persius, in this apostrophe, inveighs against these lascivious old fellows, who wrote such poems as are before mentioned.

Dost thou, who art old enough to be wiser, put together such obscene

Your moveable throat, and effeminate with a lascivious eye:
Here, neither in a modest manner, nor with a serene voice,
You may see the great Titi tremble, when the verses enter the loins, 20

And when the inwards are scratch'd with the tremulous verse,
Dost thou, O old man, collect food for the ears of others?
For ears, to which even thou, in skin destroy'd, may'st say—“Enough.”

“For what purpose to have learnt, unless this ferment,
“and what once obscene and filthy stuff, in order to become food for the ears of your libidinous hearers?

23. For ears, &c.] He repeats the word auriculis, in order to make his reproof the more striking.

— To which even thou, &c.] The poet's imitations of Horace, in all his Satires, are very evident; in none more than in this line. There can be little doubt that Persius had in his eye that passage of Horace, Lib. ii. Sat. v. l. 96—8.

Importunus amat laudari? donèc ohe jam!
Ad cœlum manibus sublatis dixerit, urge, & Crescentem tumidis infla sermonibus utrem.

— Should lust
Of empty glory be the blockhead's gust, Indulge his eager appetite, and puff
The growing bladder with inspiring stuff;
Till he, with hands uplifted to the skies,
Enough! enough! in gluttèd rapture cries.

FRANCIS.

Thus Persius represents the reciter of the obscene verses to be so flattered, as to be ready to burst with the vanity created within him; so that he is forced to stop the fulsome applause and compliments of his hearers, with crying—“Enough! forbear! I “can endure no more!”

— Ohe
Jam fatis est!

HOR. Sat. v. Lib. i. l. 12, 13.

Cute perditus has perhaps a reference to the fable of the proud frog, who swelled till she burst. See Hor. Sat. iii. Lib. ii.
l. 314—19.

24. Unless this ferment.] The old man answers—To what purpose, then, is all my study and pains to excel in this kind of writing, unless they appear thus, and shew themselves in their effects

"Innata est, rupto jecore exierit caprificus?"

25

En pallor, seniumque! O mores, usque adeone Scire tuum nihil est, nisi te scire hoc sciat alter!

"At pulchrum est, digito monstrari, & dicier, Hic est.

effects on myself and hearers? In vain would you mix leaven with the dough of which bread is made, unless it ferments and lightens the mass; so all my science would be vain, if it lay dormant and quiet within me, and did not shew itself visibly to others, by being productive of such compositions which raise such a ferment in the minds of my hearers. Fermentum here is metaphorical.

24. And what once, &c.] In order to understand this line, we are to observe, that the caprificus was a sort of wild fig-tree, which grew about walls and other buildings; and by shooting its branches into the joints of them, burst a passage through them, and, in time, weakened and destroyed them. See Juv. Sat. x. l. 145, note.

The apologist farther illustrates his meaning, by comparing his natural, as well as acquired talents, to the caprificus—these, having once taken root within, will burst forth, through the inmost recesses of the mind, to the observation of all, as the caprificus does through the clefts of rocks, or stone-quarries, or stone-walls: and "unless this were the case, what good would these 'inbred talents do me?"—The antients reckoned the liver as the seat of the concupiscible and irascible passions. See Juv. Sat. i. l. 45, note. Here Persius uses the word jecore, for the inward mental part, which contained the genius and talents of the poet, and was to be broken through by the energy of their exertions.

26. Lo, paleness and old-age!] These words are by some supposed to be the end of the apologist's speech, as if he had said—See how pale I am with study and application, and that in my old-age, a time of life when others retire from labour—and shall I meet with no reward for all this?

Others suppose the words to be the reply of Persius, and a continuation of his reproof—"Lo, paleness of countenance and 'old-age!—and yet thou dost not cease from such vain toils!" See Juv. vii. 96—7.

— O manners!] Like that of Tully—O tempora! O mores!

q. d. What are we come to!—what can we say of the manners of the times, when an old fellow can write such obscenity, and can find hearers to approve his repetition of it!

27. Altogether

"Is within innate, the wild fig-tree, should come forth from
"the bursten liver?" 25

Lo, paleness and old-age! O manners! is your knowing,
then,

Altogether nothing, unless another should know that you know it?

"But it is pleasant to be shewn with the finger, and to be said—"This is he."

"For thee to have been the exercises of an hundred curl-
"pates,

27. Altogether nothing, unless, &c.] Persius here imitates a passage of Lucilius—

———Id me

Nolo scire mihi cujus sum conscius solus,
Ne damnum faciam. Scire est nescire, nisi id me
Scire alius sciret.

What, says Persius, is all your science, then, nothing worth, unless you tell all the world of it? have you no pleasure or satisfaction in what you know, without you exert a principle of vain glory, by cultivating the applause of others? Is this the end of your study and application? Scire tuum—i. e. scientia tua. Gracism. Comp. istud vivere, l. 9.

28. Shewn with the finger.] Here is an ironical prolepsis—the poet anticipates some of the pleas of these writers for their proceedings.—It is a pleasant thing, perhaps, you may say, to be so famous for one's writings, as to be pointed at as one goes along, by the passers by, and to hear them say—"That's he"—
"that's the famous poet."

Horace disgraces one of his finest odes, by mentioning, with pleasure, such a piece of vanity—

Quod monstro digito prætereuntium Romanæ fidicen lyre. Ode iii. Lib. iv. l. 22—3.

Cicero, Tusc. v. 36, mentions it as an instance of great weakness in Demosthenes, in that he professed himself much pleased with hearing a poor girl, who was carrying water, say to another, as he passed by—"There, that's the famous Demos"thenes."—"Quid hoc levius? (says Tully)—"At quantus
"orator?—Sed apud alios loqui videlicet didicerat, non mul-
"tum ipse secum."

29. The exercises, &c.] Dictata.—Precepts or instructions of any kind—particularly, and most frequently, lessons which the master pronounceth to his scholars; school-boys exercises.
ANSW. The poet continues his banter—

Is it nothing, think you, to have your verses taught to the children

“Pro nihilo pendas?”—Ecce, inter pocula, quærunt 30 children of the nobles at school; to have an hundred such boys getting them by heart, and repeating them as their lessons, or writing themes on passages of your works?—The poet, here, has a sting at the emperor Nero, who ordered his poems to be taught in the schools for youth.

29. Curl-pates.] i. e. The young nobility, so called, from having their hair dressed and curled in a particular manner.

30—31. Satiated Romans, &c.] He calls the Roman nobility, Romulidæ, dim. from Romulus their great progenitor; and he means hereby to insinuate, sarcastically, their declension and defection from the sober and virtuous manners of their ancestors, Comp. Juv. Sat. i. l. 100, note.

Here we see them at table, gormandizing, and filled with eating and drinking; then calling for somebody to repeat passages from the writings of poets for their entertainment, or perhaps that they might enquire into the merit of them.

31. Divine poems.] Diæ, from Gr. Διως, divinus. The science of poetry was reckoned divine; but the poet's use of the epithet, in this place, is ironical, meaning to satirize those productions which these Romulidæ saturi were so pleased with.—Quid narrent—i. e. what they may contain and set forth.

32. Here.] i. e. Upon this occasion.

—Some one, &c.] Some noble and delicate person, dressed in a violet-coloured garment, which was a sign of effeminacy, and greatly in fashion among such of the Roman nobility who were the beaux of the time.

33. Something rankish, &c.] i. e. Repeated something of the obscene or filthy kind, though with a bad voice, uttered through his nose, by way of preface to what follows.

34. Phyllis.] Phyllis, the daughter of Lycurgus, who fell in love with Demophoon, the son of Theseus, on his return from Troy, and entertained him at bed and board. He, after some time, going from her, promised to return again; but not performing his promise, she hanged herself upon an almond-tree.

—Hypsipyle.] Hypsipyle was the daughter of Thoas, and queen of Lemnos, who, when all the women in the island slew their male kindred, preserved her father; for which pious deed she

"Dost thou esteem as nothing?" Lo, among their cups,

Romans enquire, what divine poems may relate.

mentable matter

Of the poets, and supplants words with a tender palate, 35

The men have assented: now are not the ashes of that poet

she was banished. She entertained Jason in his way to Colchos, and had twins by him.

The poet mentions the names of these women in the plural number; by which we may understand, that he means any women of such sort of character, who have suffered by their amours in some disastrous way or other, and have been made subjects of verse. Eliquo signifies to melt down, or make liquid. Hence, to sing, or speak softly and effeminately. ANSW.

34. Some lamentable matter, &c.] Some mournful love-tale, either invented or related by the poets.

35. Supplants words, &c.] He does not utter the words in a plain, manly manner, but minces and trips them up, as it were, in their way through his palate, to make them sound the more apposite to the tender subject.

A metaphor, from wrestlers, who, when they trip up their antagonists, are said—supplantare.

—His refining throat

Fritters, and melts, and minces ev'ry note.

BREWSTER.

His dainty palate tripping forth his words.

HOLYDAY.

36. The men have assented.] The poet uses the word virī, here, as a mark of censure—that those who were called men, should be delighted with such verses, so repeated.

They all assented to the approbation given by some of the company.

—Ashes of the poet, &c.] Cinis ille poetæ—i. e. cinis il-lius poetæ. Hypallage.—It was the custom to burn the bodies of the dead, and to gather up their ashes, and put them into urns, in order to preserve them.

To be sure, the very ashes of a poet, thus approved by a set of drunken people, must be happy! Iron.

37. Lighter

Felix? Nunc levior cippus non imprimit ossa?
 Laudant convivæ—Nunc non e manibus illis,
 Nunc non e tumulo, fortunataque favillâ,
 Nascentur violæ? Rides, ait, & nimis uncis Naribus indulges: an erit qui velle recuset
 Os populi mernisse? & cedro digna locutus, Linquere nec scombros metuentia carmina, nec thus?
 Quisquis es, ô modò quem ex adverso dicere feci,

40

37. Lighter hillock.] Cippus is a grave-stone, or monument; also a little hill of earth, such as are raised over graves.

This line alludes to the usual superstitious wish which the Romans expressed for a deceased friend—Sit tibi terra levis—may the earth be light upon thee!—The cippus marked the grave.

38. The guests praise.] Now they all break forth into the highest commendation.

—Manes.] Signifies the spirit, or ghost, of one departed—sometimes what we call the remains, or dead body.

Sepulchra diruti, nudati manes, Liv. and this seems the sense of it here.

39. From the tomb.] Tumulus signifies an hillock, or heap of earth; also a tomb, grave, or sepulchre. ANSW.

—Fortunate ember.] Favilla (from favere, to shine) a hot ember; the white ashes wherein the fire is raked up.

Here it means the embers of the funeral pile, some of which were mixed with the bones in the urn.

40. Violets be sprung up.] It was usual among the Greeks and Romans, when they would extol a living person, to speak of flowers springing up under his footsteps; and of the favoured dead, to speak of sweet-smelling flowers growing over their graves. Perhaps this idea was first derived from the custom of strewing flowers in the way of eminent persons as they walked along, and of strewing flowers over the graves of the departed.

It is easy to see that Persius is jeering the person to whom he is speaking, when he mentions the above circumstances of honour and happiness, attending the writers of such verses, as are repeated to, and approved by, a set of drunken libertines at a feast.

Juvenal, on another occasion, has collected all the above ideas, as the gifts of the gods to the good and worthy. Sat. vii. l. 207—8.

—You laugh, says he, &c.] The defender of such writings is not a little hurt with the ironical sneer of Persius.—O, says the galled poet, you are laughing all this while; you are too severe upon us.

Happy? now does not a lighter hillock mark his bones?
 The guests praise: now will there not from those manes,
 Now will there not from the tomb, and the fortunate ember, Violets spring up?—You laugh, says he, and too much indulge 40

Your hooked nostrils. Will there be, who can refuse to be willing

To have deserved the countenance of the people? and, having spoken things worthy of cedar,

To leave verses fearing neither little fishes, nor frankincense?
 Whoever thou art, O thou, whom I just now made to speak on the adverse part,

41. Hooked nostrils.] Uncis naribus indulges—a phrase for indulging scorn and sneering; taken from the wrinkled and distorted shape assumed by the nose on such occasions. Thus Hor. Lib. i. Sat. vi. l. 5, where he is observing, that “Mæcenas does not, as too many are apt to do, look with scorn and contempt on people of obscure birth,” expresses himself in this manner—

Nec———

Ut plerique solent, naso suspendis adunco Ignotos.

The ideas of scorn and contempt are often expressed among us by turning up the nose.

— Will there be, &c.] i. e. Is such a person to be found, who is so lost to all desire of praise, continues the apologist, as to have no concern at all to merit the approbation and countenance of the public?

42. Worthy of cedar, &c.] i. e. Worthy to be preserved. Cedar was looked upon as an incorruptible wood, which never decayed. From the cedar they extracted a juice, which being put on books, and other things, kept them from moths, worms, and even decay itself.

43. To leave verses, &c.] i. e. In no danger of being used as waste paper, either by fishmongers, to wrap or pack their fish in when they sell it, or by perfumers, for their frankincense or other perfumes. See Hor. Lib. ii. Epist. i. l. 266, &c. here imitated by Persius.

44. Whoever thou art, &c.] The poet here, after having severely satirized a desire of false praise, and empty commendation of what really deserves no praise at all, now allows, that praise, where properly bestowed, is not to be despised.

44. Made

Non ego, cum scribo, si fortè quid aptius exit, 45
 (Quando hæc rara avis est, si quid tamen aptius exit)
 Laudari metuum : neque enim mihi cornea fibra est.
 Sed recti finemque extremumque esse recuso Euge tuum & Bellè. Nam Bellè hoc excute totum :
 Quid non intus habet ? Non hìc est Ilias Acci, 50
 Ebria veratro ? Non si qua elegidia crudi Dictarunt procere ? Non quicquid denique lectis Scribitur in citreis ?—Calidum scis ponere fumen ;
 Scis comitem horridulum trita donare lacernâ ;
 Et verum, inquis, amo ; verum mihi dicite de me. 55

44. Made to speak, &c.] i. e. Whom I have been setting up as a supposed adversary, or opponent, in this dispute. Whoever thou art, that findest what I have been saying applicable to thyself, let me confess to thee, that—

45. I, when I write, &c.] i. e. When I compose verses—if by chance any thing well adapted to the subject, and well expressed, flows from my pen (since I confess this happens but seldom, and therefore gives me the greater satisfaction) I should not fear commendation. Comp. Juv. vi. l. 164.

47. Inwards so horny.] Fibra, the inwards or entrails—here, by met. the inward man, the moral sense.

Horny—hard—insensible like horn. See Sat. i. l. 31.

q. d. I am not so callous, so insensible, or unfeeling, as not to be pleased, as well as touched, with deserved praise.

48. But to be the end, &c.] But that the eulogies of fools and fots should be the end and aim of writing, I deny ; or, indeed, that, merely to gain applause, should be the view and end of even doing right, I cannot allow.

49. Your "Well done ! O fine !"] Euge !—bellè ! like our Well done ! fine ! bravo ! which were acclamations of applause. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 44, note.

— Examine this whole "O fine !"] Sift, canvass well this mark of applause which you are so fond of.

50. What has it not within ? &c.] What is there so absurd, that you will not find it applied to as the object of it ? in short, what is not contained within it ?

— The Iliad of Accius.] Accius Labeo, who made a wretched translation of Homer's Iliad. See note above, l. 4. Is not even this contained within the compass of your favourite terms of applause ?

51. Drunk with hellebore.] The antients made use of hellebore, not only when they were disordered in the head, but also when

I, when I write, if haply something more apt comes forth, 45 (Since this is a rare bird) yet if something more apt comes forth,

Would not fear to be praised, nor indeed are my inwards so horny.

But to be the end and extreme of right I deny Your "Well done!" and your "O fine!" for examine this whole "O fine,"

What has it not within? Is not the Iliad of Accius here, 50 Drunk with hellebore? Is there not, if crude nobles have dictated

Any little elegies? Is there not, lastly, whatever is written In citron beds?—You know how to place a hot sow's-udder;
You know to present a shabby client with a worn garment;
And "I love truth (say you); tell me the truth concerning
"me." 55

when in health, in order to quicken the apprehension. This the poet humourously supposes Accius to have done, but in such a quantity as to stupify his senses.

51. Is there not, if crude nobles, &c.] Are not the flimsy and silly little elegies and sonnets, which our raw and unexperienced nobles write and repeat, all subjects of your favourite Bellè?
Is not this constantly bestowed upon them?

52. Is there not, lastly, &c.] The citron wood was reckoned very valuable and precious; of this the nobles had their beds and couches made, on which they used to lie, or sit, when they wrote. Lastly, says Persius, all the trash which issues forth from the citron couches of the great is contained within the compass of this mark of applause; therefore your making it your end and aim is but very little worth your while: it is so unworthily bestowed, as to be no sort of criterion of excellence and desert.

53. How to place, &c.] The poet still continues to satirize empty applause, by shewing that it may be gained by the lowest and most abject means.

He therefore attacks those who bribe for it. You know how, says he, to place on your table a dainty dish. See Juv. Sat. xi.
81, note.

54. You know to present, &c.] You know the effect of giving an old shabby coat to one of your poor dependents. Comp.
Hor. Epist. xix. Lib. ii. l. 37, 38.

55. "I love truth, &c."] Then, when you have given a
Vol. II. X good

Quî pote? Vis dicam?—Nugaris, cum tibi, calve, Pinguis aqualculus propenso sesquipede extet.

O Jane, a tergo quem nulla ciconia pinfit, good dinner to some, and still meaner presents to others, in order to purchase their applause, you ask them their opinion, desiring them to speak the truth.

56. How is it possible?] i. e. that they should speak the truth, when they are afraid of offending you if they did? You have obliged them, and they fear to disoblige you, which, if they spoke their real thoughts, they would most probably do.

—Would you have me say it?] says Persius, who am no dependent of yours, or under any obligation to disguise my sentiments.

—You trifle, &c.] I tell you plainly, and without disguise, that you are an old trifler, to pretend to wit or poetry, with that great belly of yours, that hangs down at least a foot and an half below your middle, and bespeaks a genius for gluttony, but for nothing else. Perhaps the poet hints at the Greek proverb.

Παχυσια γαστρὴ λεπτὸν ἢ τίλην νοον.

“A fat belly produceth not a subtle mind.”

58. O Janus!] Janus was the first king of Italy, who gave refuge to Saturn, when he fled from his son Jupiter from Crete. From his name the first month of the year is called January. He was pictured with two faces, one before and one behind, as regarding the time past and future.

q. d. Thou art happy, O Janus, inasmuch as being able to see both before and behind, thou art in no danger of being ignorant of what passeth behind thy back, and, therefore, of enduring the flouts and jeers, which our nobles receive behind their backs, from those who flatter them to their faces.

—Whom no stork pecks, &c.] There were three methods of scoff and ridicule: one was holding out the finger, and crooking it a little, to imitate the bill of storks; they held it towards him who was the object of derision, moving it backwards and forwards, like the pecking of the stork. See AINSW.

How is it possible?—Would you have me say it?—You trifle, when, O bald head,

Your fat paunch stands forth with a hanging-down foot and an half.

O Janus! whom no stork pecks behind your back,
Nor has the moveable hand imitated white ears, Nor so much of the tongue, as an Apulian bitch when athirst. 60

Ye, O patrician blood, whose condition it is to live with The hinder part of the head blind, prevent flouts behind your backs,

What is the speech of the people?—What forsooth, unless that the verses

Now at last flow with soft measure, so that, across the polish, the joining

59. The moveable hand, &c.] Another mode of derision was, putting the thumbs up to the temples, and moving them in such manner as to imitate asses ears, which, in the inside, are usually white.

60. Nor so much of the tongue, &c.] A third method was to loll out the tongue, like a dog when thirsty.

Apulia was the hottest part of Italy, of course the dogs most thirsty, and most apt to loll out their tongues the farthest.

None of all this could happen to Janus without his seeing it.

61. O patrician blood, &c.] Ye sons of senators, ye nobles of Rome, whose fortune it is to be born without eyes at the back of your heads, and who therefore can't be apprized of what passes behind your backs.

62. Prevent flouts, &c.] By avoiding all occasions of them;
by not writing verses, for which your flatterers will commend you to your face, and laugh at you behind your backs.

63. What is the speech, &c.] Persius here seems to go back to the de me, l. 55; all between which, and this l. 63, is to be understood as a parenthesis, very properly introduced in the course of the subject.

Now, says the great man to his flatterer, after having treated him with a good dinner (l. 53.) what does the world say of me and my writings?

— What forsooth.] i. e. What should they say, what can they say, unless to commend?

64. Now at last, &c.] That after all the pains you have taken,

Effundat junctura ungues? Scit tendere versum, 65
 Non secus ac si oculo rubricam dirigat uno.
 Sive opus in mores, in luxum, in prandia regum,
 Dicere res grandes nostro dat Musa poetæ.
 Ecce, modò, heroas sensus afferre videmus
 Nugari solitos Græcè; nec ponere lucum 70
 Artifices; nec rus saturum laudare; ubi corbes taken, you have at last produced a charming work—the verses flow in soft and gentle numbers.

64. Across the polish, &c.] Your verses are so highly finished, that they will stand the test of the severest and nicest critics.

Metaph. taken from polishers of marble, who run their nail over the surface, in order to try if there be any unevenness; and if the nail passes freely, without any stop or hindrance whatsoever, even over where there are joinings, then the work is completely finished. (Comp. Hor. De Art. Poet. l. 294.) The surface being perfectly smooth, was said effundere unguem, it passing as smoothly as water poured forth over it.

65. How to extend a verse.] This period is also metaphorical, and alludes to the practice of carpenters and others, who work by line and rule, and who, when they would draw a strait line, shut one eye, the better to confine the visual rays to a single point. So, says the flatterer, this poet of ours draws forth his verses to their proper length, and makes them as exact as if he worked by line and rule.

66. The rubric.] Rubrica, a sort of ruddle, or red chalk, with which carpenters drew their lines on their work.

67. On manners.] Whatever the subject may be—whether he writes comedy, and ridicules the humours of the times.

— On luxury.] Or if he write satire, and lash the luxury of the great.

— Or the dinners of kings.] Or writes tragedy, and chuses for his subject the sad feasts of tyrants. Perhaps Persius here alludes to the story of Thyestes, the son of Pelops, and brother of Atreus, with whose wife he had committed adultery; to revenge which, Atreus dressed the child born of her, and served him up to his brother at his own table. On this Seneca wrote a tragedy.

68. The Muse gives our poet, &c.] In short, be what may the subject, a Muse is ever at hand, to inspire our poet with the most sublime and lofty poetry.

Such is the account which the great man receives of himself from his flatterer, as an answer to his question, l. 63, “What does the world say of me?”

69. Behold

May pour forth severe nails. He knows how to extend a verse, 65

Not otherwise than if he should direct the rubric with one eye;
Whether the work is on manners, on luxury, or the dinners of kings,

The Muse gives our poet to say great things.

Behold now we see those bring heroic thoughts,
Who used to trifle in Greek, nor to describe a grove 70
Skillful; nor to praise a fertile country, where are baskets,

69. Behold now we see, &c.] Our poet proceeds to satirize other writers of his time, who, allured with the hopes of being flattered, attempted the sublime heights of epic writing, though utterly unfit for the undertaking.

— Heroic thoughts, &c.] Heroas sensus.—Sensus signifies, not only sense, meaning, understanding, but also thought.

Heroas, from herous -a -um, heroic, stands here for heroos, masc.—i. e. heroicos. Heroi sensus is to be understood of sublime matters for poetry, such as heroic or epic subjects.

Now-a-days, saith Persius, we see certain writers attempting and bringing out heroic poems, who used to be writing trifles in Greek, such as little epigrams, or the like. Some copies, instead of videmus, read docemus, as if the poet attacked school-masters, and other instructors of children, for teaching boys to write in heroics, at a time when they are not fit for it: but as it is not the purpose of these papers to enter into controversy with editors and commentators, I take videmus, as it stands in the Delphin edition, Farnaby, and Marshall.

70. Nor to describe a grove, &c.] They are so unskilled, and such bad artists even in the lighter style of composition, that they know not how to describe, as they ought, the most trite and common subjects, such as a grove, fields, &c. Pono -ère, literally signifies to put or place: but it also signifies to paint, draw, or pourtray, and so to describe. See Hor. Lib. iv. Ode viii. l. 8.

Hic faxo, liquidis ille coloribus

Solens nunc hominem ponere, nunc deum.

71. Nor to praise a fertile country.] So as to set forth its beauties.

— Where are baskets, &c.] Instead of describing the great and leading features of a fine plentiful country, they dwell upon the most trivial circumstances—

—His lay

Recounts its chimnies, panniers, hogs, and hay.

80

72. Feasts of Pales, &c.] Pales was the goddess of shepherds, who kept feasts in honour of her, in order to procure the safe parturition of their cattle. The reason of the epithet fumosa is, that during the feast of Pales the rustics lighted fires with hay, straw, or stubble, over which they leaped, by way of purifying themselves. These feasts of Pales were sure to be introduced by these jejune poets.

73. From whence Remus.] Another circumstance which they introduce, is a description of the birth-place of Remus and Romulus.

— Thou, O Quintius, &c.] Cincinnatus, who was called from the plough to be made dictator of Rome—he too is introduced on the occasion.

74. Thy trembling wife, &c.] They tell us, how his wife Racilia was frightened at the sight of the messengers from Rome, and how she helped him on with his dictator's robe, as he stood by the oxen which were in the plough—and how one of the Roman officers, who had attended the embassy to call him to the dictatorship, carried his plough home upon his shoulders.

75. Well done, O poet!] Iron. Finely done, to be sure, to introduce such weighty matters as these into thy poem! thou art in a fair way to gain the highest applause!

Persius, in this passage, glances at some poetaster of his time, who, in a poem on the pleasures of a country life, had been very particular and tedious upon the circumstances here recited. See Calaubon.

76. There is now, &c.] The poet now proceeds to censure those who affected antiquated and obsolete words and phrases, and who professed to admire the style of antiquated authors.

— The veiny book.] Venosus—metaph. from old men, whose veins stand out and look turgid, owing to the shrinking of the flesh, through old age. Venosus liber, hence, signifies a book of some old and antiquated author—a very old book.

— Brisean Accius.] Briseas was a town in Thrace, where Bacchus was worshipped with all the mad rites used at his feasts; hence

And a fire-hearth, and swine, and the feasts of Pales smoky with hay :

From whence Remus, and thou, O Quintius, wearing coul-ters in a furrow,

Whom thy trembling wife cloathed dictator before the oxen,
And thy ploughs the listor carried home. Well done,
O poet!

75

There is now, whom the veiny book of Brisæan Accius;
There are those whom both Pacuvius, and rugged Antiopa Might detain, having propp'd her mournful heart with sorrows.

When you see blear-ey'd fathers pour these admonitions into Their children, do you seek whence this bombast manner of speaking

hence he was called Brisæus. Persius gives this name to Accius, on account of the wild and strange bombast which was in his writings.

77. Pacuvius.] An antient tragic poet of Brundisium, who wrote the tragedy of Antiopa, the wife of Lycus, king of Thebes, who was repudiated by her husband, on account of her intrigue with Jupiter. The poet says, verrucosa Antiopa, to express the roughness and ruggedness of the style in which this tragedy was written.—Verrucosus, full of warts, tumps, or hillocks—so uneven, rugged.

78. Might detain.] Moretur—i. e. might detain their attention.

— Having propp'd, &c.] This strange fustian expression is probably to be found in the tragedy. The poet appears to cite it, as a sample of the style in which the play is written.

There are those, says Persius, who, now-a-days, can spend their time in reading these authors.

79. Blear-ey'd fathers, &c.] In old men the eyes are apt to be weak, moist, and to distil corrosive matter. When you see such advising their children to study the old barbarous Latin poets, and to be fond of obsolete words—

80. Do you seek, &c.] Are you at a loss to know whence this jargon, of obsolete and modern words, is heard in our common speech?

Sartago literally signifies a frying-pan; and the poet, perhaps, calls the mixture or jargon of old words and new, sartago loquendi.

Venerit in linguas? Unde istud dedecus, in quo Troffulus exultat tibi per subsellia lævis?
 Nilne pudet, capiti non posse pericula cano
 Pellere, quin tepidum hoc optes audire, Decenter?

Fur es, ait Pedio: Pedius quid? crimina rasis 85
 Librat in antithetis: doctus posuisse figuras Laudatur: bellum hoc,—hoc bellum? An, Rōmule, ceves?

loquendi, in allusion to the mixture of ingredients, of which they made their fried cakes, as bran, fat, honey, seeds, cheese, and the like.

Some think that he alludes to the crackling, bouncing, and hissing noise of the frying-pan, with these ingredients in it, over the fire; this seems to relate to the manner of utterance, more than to what was uttered. See AINSW. Sartago, N° 2.

81. Whence that disgrace.] That style of writing, and of speaking, so disgraceful to the purity and smoothness of the Latin language.

82. Smooth Troffulus, &c.] The Roman knights were called Troffuli, from Troffulus, a city of Tuscany, which they took without the assistance of any infantry. Here the poet joins it with the epithet lævis, soft, effeminate; therefore Troffulus, here, appears to signify a beau, a coxcomb, a petit-maitre. See AINSW. Troffulus; and Casaubon in loc.

— Thro' the benches?] Subsellia—the seats at the theatre, or at the public recitals of poetry, and other compositions. These fine gentlemen were so pleased with the introduction of obsolete words and phrases, that they could hardly keep their places; they spread a general applause through all the benches where they sat, and leaped up with ecstasy in their seats, charmed with such a poet.

83. Does it nothing shame you, &c.] Persius now proceeds to censure the vanity of the orators, who paid more regard to the commendations of their auditories, than to the issue of the most important causes, even where life or fame was at stake.

Are you not ashamed, says Persius, ought you not to blush at your vanity and folly, that, if accused of some capital crime, instead of using plain arguments to defend your life from the danger which awaits it, and to make that your end and aim, you are endeavouring so to speak, as to catch the applause of your judges, and of the auditory, and make it your chief wish to hear them say—"Well, the man speaks decently:"—a poor lukewarm expression at best.

85. Pedius.] Pedius Blefus was accused, in the time of Nero, by Came on their tongues? Whence that disgrace, in which The smooth Troffulus exults to thee thro' the benches?

Does it nothing shame you, not to be able to drive away dangers from

Your grey head, but you must wish to hear this lukewarm—Decently?

Thou art a thief (says one to Pedius)—What Pedius?
 his crimes

85

He weighs in polished antitheses: to have laid down

He is praised: this is fine!—this is fine? O Romulus, do you wag the tail?

by the Cyrenians, of having robbed and plundered the temple of Æsculapius. He was condemned and put out of the senate.

Hence the poet uses the name of Pedius, here, as denoting any supposed person accused of theft.

“Thou art a thief,” says some accuser, laying a robbery to his charge.

— What Pedius?] i. e. What says Pedius, or what doth he, on such an accusation?

86. He weighs in polished antitheses.] He opposes to his accusation curious figures of speech, affected phrases, sentences, and periods, in order to catch applause, instead of producing weighty, pertinent, and plain arguments for his defence. He puts, as it were, his accusation in one scale, and his affected periods in the other, and thus weighs one against the other. Antithesis (from ἀντί, contrā, and τίθημι, pono) is a rhetorical flourish, when contraries are opposed to each other. Here, by sy-
nec. it stands for all the affected flowers of speech.

87. He is praised.] The judges and auditory are highly delighted with the learned figures of speech, which he has laid before them in his oration.

— This is fine!] say his hearers—finely spoken! finely said!

— This is fine?] answers Persius, with indignation at the absurdity of such ill-timed applause, of such affected and ill-timed flourishes.

— O Romulus, &c.] Can any Roman shew himself thus degenerate from his great and virtuous ancestor Romulus, as to fawn and flatter on such an occasion, and be like a dog that wags his tail when he would curry favour? Caveo significat wag,

Mēn' moveat quippe, &, cantet si naufragus, aſſem
 Protulerim? cantas, cum fracta te in trabe pictum
 Ex humero portes? Verum, nec nocte paratum Plorabit, qui me volet incurvaſſe querelā.

90

M. Sed numeris decor ~~est~~, & junctura addita crudis.

P. Claudere ſic verſum didicit: Berecynthus Attin, wag, or move the tail, as dogs do when they fawn upon one. Hence, metaph. it is uſed to expreſs fawning and flattery.

Perſius uſes the word Romule, as Juv. Sat. iii. l. 67, uſes Quirine.—See the note there.

88. If a ſhipwreck'd mariner ſings, &c.] If a poor ſailor, that had been caſt away, ſhould meet me in the ſtreet, and aſk an alms, at the ſame time appearing very jolly and merry, would this be the way to move my compaſſion; to make me pull ſome money out of my pocket and give it him?

89. Do you ſing, &c.] It was the cuſtom for perſons that had been ſhipwrecked, and had eſcaped with their lives, to have themſelves, together with the ſcene of their miſfortune and danger, painted on a board, which they hung by a ſtring from their ſhoulders upon their breaſt, that the paſſers-by might be moved with compaſſion at the ſight, and relieve them with alms. Theſe tables were afterwards hung up in the temples, and dedicated to ſome god, as Neptune, Juno, &c.—hence they were called votivæ tabulæ. See Hor. Lib. i. Ode v. ad fin. Juv. Sat. xii. l. 27.

The poet here allegorizes the caſe of Pedius.—Do you ſing, when you are carrying your miſerable ſelf painted on a board, and repreſented as ſuffering the calamity of ſhipwreck, in order to move compaſſion;—i. e. Are you ſtudying and making fine ſlowiſhing ſpeeches, filled with affected tropes and figures, at a time when you are accuſed of ſuch a crime as theft, and are ſtanding in the dangerous ſituation of an arraigned robber? Is this the way to move compaſſion towards you?

90. A true, &c.] There wants ploratum, dolorem, or ſome ſuch word, after verum—plorare verum dolorem, like vivere vitam, for inſtance.

— Not prepared by night.] Not conned, ſtudied, or invented beforehand; over night, as we ſay.

91. Bend me by his complaint.] i. e. Make me bow or yield to the feelings of commiſeration for his ſufferings.

The poet means, that the complainant who would move his pity muſt ſpeak the true and native language of real grief from the heart, not accoſt him with an artful ſtudied ſpeech, as if he had conned it over beforehand.

For if a shipwreck'd mariner sings, could he move me, and a penny

Should I bring forth? do you sing, when yourself painted on a broken plank

You carry from your shoulder? A true (misfortune) not prepared by night, 90

He shall deplore, who would bend me by his complaint.

M. But there is beauty and composition added to crude numbers.

P. Thus hath he learnt to conclude a verse: "Berecyn-
"thian Attin,

Si vis me flere, dolendum est primum ipsi tibi.

HOR. DE ART. POET. 102, 103.

So Pedius, however he might get the applause of his hearers, by his figurative eloquence and flowery language, when on his trial, could never excite pity for his situation.

92. But there is beauty, &c.] Well, but however the flights which you have been mentioning, says the poetaster, and the studied and flowery style, may be unsuitable in declamation, especially on such occasions, yet surely they have a peculiar beauty in our verses, which would be quite raw, and appear crude and undigested without them.

— And composition added, &c.] Junctura is literally a coupling, or joining together; hence a composition, or joining words in a particular form, as in verse.

Notum si callida verbum

Reddiderit junctura novum.

HOR. DE ART. POET. l. 47—8.

The poetaster would fain contend for the great improvement made in writing verses by the modern studied composition, and the introduction of figurative writing.

93. Thus hath he learnt to conclude a verse.] The didicit here, without a nominative case, is rather abrupt and obscure, but the poet affects to be so; he does not venture to name the person meant, though his quoting some verses of Nero, as instances of the great improvements which had been made in the composition of verse, plainly shews his design, which was to ridicule that emperor, whose affected, jingling, and turgid style, was highly applauded by his flatterers.

— "Berecynthian Attin."] This and the next verse rhyme in the original.

Et qui cæruleum dirimebat Nerea delphin :

Sic, costam longo subduximus Apennino.

95

M. Arma virum, nonne hoc spumofum, & cortice pingui,

"Bassaris; & lyncem Mænas flexura corymbis,

94. And the dolphin, &c.] Alluding to the story of Arion, who was carried safe to land, when thrown overboard, on the back of a dolphin.

Nereus, a sea god, is here affectedly put for the sea itself.

95. Thus we removed, &c.] There is a jingle in this verse between the longo in the middle, and Apennino at the end. The writer of these three quoted lines changes Atys or Attis into Attin, to make it rhyme with Delphin.

Atys, or Attis, the subject of this poem, was a handsome youth of Phrygia, beloved by Cybele, who from Berecynthus, a mountain of Asia Minor, where she was worshipped, was called Berecynthia; hence the writer of the poem affects to call Atys Berecynthus.

— Thus we removed a rib, &c.] The end of this verse is spondaic, which Nero much affected in his heroics.—He calls Hannibal's opening a way for his army over the Alps, removing a rib from the Apennine mountains—a strange, affected phrase!

96. "Arms and the man," &c.] Arma virumque—Æn. i. l. 1. Well, replies the poetaster, if you find fault with what you have quoted, I suppose you will find fault with Virgil's arma virumque cano, and perhaps with his whole Æneid, as frothy, turgid, and, like a tree with a thick bark, appearing great, but having little of value within.

97. As an old bough, &c.] Ramale is a dead bough cut from a tree. Persius answers—Yes, Virgil is like an old bough with a thick bark; but then we must understand, such a bough as has been cut from the tree, and whose bark has been dried for many years by the sun, so that all its gross particles are exhaled and gone, and nothing but what is solid remains. Suber signifies the cork-tree, which is remarkable for its thick bark—therefore put here for the bark; syn.—thus cortex, the bark, is sometimes put for the tree, which is remarkably light. Hor. Ode ix. Lib. iii. l. 22.

98. What then is tender, &c.] Well, says the opponent to Persius,

"And the dolphin which divided cærulean Nereus—

"Thus we removed a rib from the long Apennine." 95

M. "Arms and the man"—is not this frothy, and with a fat bark?

P. As an old bough dried with a very large bark.

M. What then is tender, and to be red with a loose neck?

P. "They fill'd their fierce horns with Mimallonean blasts,

"And Bassaris, about to take away the head snatched from

"the proud 100

"Calf, and Mænas, about to guide a lynx with ivy,

Persius, let us have done with heroics, and tell me what you allow to be good of the tender kind of writing.

98. With a loose neck?] With a head reclined, in a languishing, soft, and tender manner? This is humourously put in opposition to the attitudes made use of in reading the bombast and fustian heroics of these poetasters, who stood with the neck stretched as high as they could, and straining their throats, to give force and loudness to their utterance.

99. They fill'd their fierce horns, &c.] Giving a fierce and warlike sound. Some render torva here writhed, twisted, or crooked, quasi torta.

Persius deriding the quærist, quotes four more lines, which are supposed to have been written by Nero, and which exhibit a specimen of one of the most absurd rhapsodies that ever was penned.

— Mimallonean blasts.] The Mimallones were priestesses of Bacchus; they were so called from Mimas, a mountain of Ionia, sacred to Bacchus.

Bombus signifies a hoarse sound or blast, as of a trumpet or horn.

100. Bassaris.] Agave, or any other of the priestesses; called Bassaris, from Bassarus, a name of Bacchus.

Having given the alarm, Agave and the rest of the Mimallones cut off the head of Pentheus (the son of Agave and Echion) and tore him to pieces, because he would drink no wine, and slighted the feasts of Bacchus. Pentheus is thought to be meant here by the superbo vitulo.

101. Mænas.] These priestesses of Bacchus were also called Mænades (from Gr. μανισσαι, insanire). See Juv. Sat. vi. l. 316.

— To guide a lynx.] These were beasts of the leopard or tyger kind, and represented as drawing the chariot of Bacchus. The word flexura, here, like flectere, Virg. G. ii. 357, means

"Evion ingeminat : reparabilis adsonat echo."

Hæc fierent, si testiculi vena ulla paterni

Viveret in nobis ? Summa delumbe salivâ

Hoc natat in labris ; & in udo est Mænas & Attin ; 105

Nec pluteum cædit, nec demorfos sapit unguës.

M. Sed quid opus teneras mordaci radere vero

Aurículas ? Vide sis, ne majorum tibi fortè

Limina frigescant. Sonat hic de nare canina to guide.—So again, Æn. i. 156. flectit equos—"he guides" or manages his horses." Thus the priestesses of Bacchus might be said flectere, to guide or manage lynxes with bands or rods of ivy. This was sacred to Bacchus, because, returning conqueror from India, he was crowned with ivy.

102. Redoubles Evion.] Ingemino signifies to redouble—to repeat often. Evios, or Evius, a name of Bacchus, on which the Bacchantes used to call (Evos, Gr.) till they wrought themselves into a fury like madness. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 62, and note.

—The repairable echo, &c.] So called from repeating, and so repairing the sounds, which would otherwise be lost.

103. Would these be made.] i. e. Would such verses as these be made, but more especially would they be commended.

—If any vein, &c.] If there were the least trace of the manly wisdom of our ancestors among us ?

104. This feeble stuff.] Delumbis—weak, feeble, broken-backed, as it were.

105. Swims in the lips.] The poet, by this phrase, seems to mean, that the flatterers of Nero had these lines always at their tongue's end (as we say) and were spitting them out, i. e. repeating and quoting them continually.

—And in the wet.] In udo esse, and in summâ salivâ natâre, seem to imply the same thing ; viz. that these poems of Aty's and Mænas were always in people's mouths, mixed with their spittle, as it were.

106. Nor does he beat his desk, &c.] The penman of such verses as these is at very little pains about them. He knows nothing of those difficulties, which, at times, pains-taking poets are under, so as to make them smite the desk which they write upon, and gnaw their nails to the quick, with vexation.

See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 7, 8.

Culpantur frustra calami, frustra laborat
Iratîs natus paries Dis atque poetis.

And again, Lib. i. Sat. x. l. 70—1.

—In versu faciendo

Nor does he beat his desk, nor taste his gnawn nails.

M. But where's the need to grate tender ears with biting truth?

See to it, lest haply the thresholds of the great
Should grow cold to you: here from a canine nostril sounds

107. Where's the need, &c.] We are to recollect, that this Satire opens with a dialogue between Persius and his friend: that the latter persuades Persius against publishing; that Persius says, he is naturally of a satirical turn of mind, and does not know how to refrain (l. 12.) and then launches forth into the severest censure on the writers of his day. His friend perceiving that what he first said against publishing would not have its effect, still farther dissuades him, by hinting at the danger he ran of getting the ill-will of the great.

"Where is the necessity (says his friend) supposing all you say to be true, yet where is the necessity to hurt the ears of those who have been used to hear nothing but flattery, and therefore must be very tender and susceptible of the acutest feelings of uneasiness and displeasure, on hearing such biting and stinging truths as you deliver?"

108. See to it.] Vide sis (i. e. si vis)—take care, if you please.

— Left haply the thresholds, &c.] Left it fall out, that you should so offend some of the great folks, as to meet with a cool reception at their houses.

So Hor. Sat. i. Lib. ii. l. 60—3.

————— O puer, ut sis
Vitalis metuo, & majorum ne quis amicus
Frigore te feriat.

109. Here.] i. e. In these Satires of yours, there is a disagreeable sound, like the snarling of a dog, very unpleasant to the ears of such people.

109—10. From a canine nostril sounds a letter.] R is called the dog's letter, because the vibration of the tongue in pronouncing it resembles the snarling of a dog. See Alchymist, Act ii. Sc. vi.

Litera—P. Per me, equidem, sint omnia protinus alba; 110

110. For my part, truly, &c.] Well, answers Persius, if this be the case, I'll have nothing to do with them; all they do and say shall be perfectly right, for me, from henceforward. The antients put black for what was bad, and white for what was good, according to that of Pythagoras—

Το μὲν λευκὸν τῆς Ἀγαθῆ φύσεως, τὸ δὲ μέλαν κακῆς.

White is of the nature of good—black of evil.

111. I hinder not.] I shall say nothing to prevent its being thought so. Or nil moror may be rendered—I don't care about it. Comp. Hor. Sat. iv. Lib. i. l. 13.

— O bravo! &c.] Well done! every thing, good people, that ye say and do shall be admirable. Iron.—This wretched verse is supposed to be written as a banter on the bad poets.

112. This pleases.] Surely this concession pleases you, my friend.

— Here, say you, I forbid, &c.] Metaph. It was unlawful to do their occasions, or to make water, in any sacred place; and it was customary to paint two snakes on the walls or doors of such places, in order to mark them out to the people. The poet is ironically comparing the persons and writings of the great (glancing, no doubt, at Nero) to such sacred places; and as these were forbidden to be defiled with urine and excrement, so he understands his friend to say, that neither the persons or writings of the emperor and of the nobles were to be defiled with the abuse and reproofs of satirists. See Juv. Sat. i. 131.

113. Paint two snakes.] These were representatives of the deity or genius of the sacred place, and painted there as signals to deter people, children especially, who were most apt to make free with such places, from the forbidden defilement. Mark out, says Persius, these sacred characters to me, that I may avoid defiling them. Iron.

114. I depart] says Persius, I am gone—I shall not tarry a moment on forbidden ground, nor drop my Satires there.

— Lucilius cut the city.] Lucilius, whose works are not come come down to us, was almost the father of the Roman Satire.

He was a very severe writer—hence our poet's saying, Secuit urbem, he cut up, flashed as with a sword, the city, i. e. the people of Rome, from the highest to the lowest. So Juv. Sat. i. l. 165.

Ense velut stricto quoties Lucilius ardens Infremuit, &c.

Comp. Hor. Sat. iv. Lib. i. l. 1—12.

Persius seems to bethink himself.—He has just said, I depart—
i. e. I shall not meddle with the great people—"But why should I depart ? Lucilius could lash all sorts of people, and
"why should not I ?"

115. Thee, Lupus, thee, Mutius.] Pub. Rutilius Lupus, the consul, and Titus Mutius Albutius, a very powerful man.

q. d. Lucilius not only satirized the great, but did it by name.

—Brake his jaw-tooth, &c.] Metaph. from grinding food between the jaw-teeth, to express the severity with which he treated them, grinding them to pieces as it were—brake his very teeth upon them.

116. Sly Horace touches, &c.] Horace, though he spared not vice, even in his friends, yet he was shrewd enough to touch it in such a manner as to please even while he chaffized.

117. And admitted, &c.] He insinuated himself into the affections, and seemed in sport, having the happy art of reproving, without the least appearance of severity or sneering.

118. Cunning to hang up, &c.] Suspendere—to hang them or hold them up to view, as the objects of his Satires.

Excusso naso, here, stands in opposition to naribus unciis, supr.

Iratum Eupolidem, prægrandi cum sene palles, means the unwrinkled and smooth appearance of the nose when in good-humour—and so, good-humour itself: Quasi—rugis excusso.

119. To mutter? &c.] If others, in their different ways, could openly satirize, may not I have the liberty of even muttering, secretly with myself, or among a few select friends privately?

—— Nor with a ditch?] Alluding to the story of Midas's barber, who, when he saw the ass's ears which Apollo had placed on the head of Midas, not daring to tell it to others, he dug a ditch or furrow in the earth, and there vented his wish to speak of it, by whispering what he had seen.

120. Nevertheless I will dig here, &c.] Though I can't speak out, yet I will use my book as the barber did the ditch; I will secretly commit to it what I have seen. Infodiam relates to the manner of writing with the point of an iron bodkin, which was called a style, on tablets of wood smeared with wax, so that the writer might be said to dig or plough the wax as he made the letters.

—— O little book.] Here, with indignation, the poet relates, as it were, to his book (as the barber did to his ditch) what he had seen; namely, the absurdity and folly of the modern taste for poetry, in Nero, in the nobles, and in all their flatterers.

121. The ears of an ass?] Alluding still to the story of Midas, who, finding fault with the judgment of the country deities, when they adjudged the prize to Apollo, in his contention with Pan, had asses ears fixed on him by Apollo.

Who, says the poet, does not judge of poetry as ill as Midas judged of music? One would think they had all asses ears given them for their folly. Suet. in Vit. Persii, says, that this line originally stood with Mida rex habet, which Cornutus, his friend and instructor, advised him to change to quis non habet? lest it should be thought to point too plainly at Nero.

—— Is this hidden thing?] This secret joke of mine.

122. This laugh of mine.] Hoc ridere, for hunc risum, a Gracism; meaning his Satires, in which he derides the objects of them. See l. 9, and note.

Is it unlawful for me to mutter? neither secretly, nor with a ditch? M. No where.

P. Nevertheless I will dig here. "I have seen, I myself " have seen, O little book: — 120

"Who has not the ears of an ass?" I this hidden thing,
This laugh of mine, such a nothing, I sell to thee for no
Iliad. O thou whosoever art inspired by bold Cratinus, Art pale over angry Eupolis, with the very great old man,

122. Such a nothing.] So insignificant and worthless in thine opinion, my friend (comp. l. 2, 3.) and perhaps in the eyes of others, that they would not think them worth reading, as you told me.

— I sell to thee, &c.] Nero, as well as Labeo, had written a poem on the destruction of Troy; to these the poet may be supposed to allude, when he says he would not sell his Satires—his nothing, as others esteemed them—for any Iliad: perhaps the word nulla may be understood as extending to Homer himself.

123. O thou whosoever, &c.] Afflate—hast read so much of Cratinus, as to be influenced and inspired with his spirit. Cratinus was a Greek comic poet, who, with a peculiar boldness and energy, satirized the evil manners of his time. The poet is about to describe what sort of readers he chuses for his Satires, and those whom he does not chuse.

124. Art pale.] With reading and studying hast contracted that paleness of countenance, which is incident to studious people. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 97; and Pers. Sat. v. l. 62.

— Angry Eupolis.] This was another comic poet, who, incensed at the vices of the Athenians, lashed them in the severest manner. He is said to have been thrown into the sea by Alcibiades, for some verses written against him.

— With the very great old man.] The poet here meant is Aristophanes, who lived to a very great age. He was of a vehement spirit, had a genius turned to raillery, wit free and elevated, and courage not to fear the person when vice was to be reprov'd. He wrote thirty-four comedies, whereof eleven only remain.

Hor. Lib. i. Sat. iv. l. 1, mentions all these three poets together.

Persius gives him the epithet of prægrandi, either on account of his age, for he lived till he was fourcore, or on account of the great eminence of his writings, for he was the prince of the old comedy, as Menander was of the new; but so as we must

Aspice & hæc. Si fortè aliquid decoctius audis, 125
 Indè vaporata lector mihi ferveat aure.
 Non hic, qui in crepidas Graiorum ludere gestit
 Sordidus; & lusco qui possit dicere, Lusce:
 Sese aliquem credens, Italo quòd honore supinus,
 Fregerit heminas Areti ædilis iniquas. 130
 Nec, qui apaco numeros, & secto in pulvere metas, Scit risisse vaser; multum gaudere paratus, join, says AINSWORTH, Eupolis and Cratinus with the former, Diphilus and Polemon with the latter.

125. These too behold.] Look also on these Satires of mine.

— If haply any thing more refined, &c.] The poet speaks modestly of his own writings, Si fortè (see before, l. 44—5.) if it should so happen, that thou shouldst meet with any thing more clear, well-digested, pure, refined than ordinary. Metaph. taken from liquors, which, by being often boiled, lose much of their quantity, but gain more strength and clearness.—It is said of Virgil, that he would make fifty verses in a morning, or more, and in the evening correct and purge them till they were reduced to about ten.

126. Let the reader glow, &c.] If, says Persius, there be any thing in my writings better than ordinary, let the reader, who has formed his taste on the writings of the poets above mentioned, glow with a fervour of delight towards the author. This I take to be the meaning of this line, which literally is—

Let the reader glow towards me with an ear evaporated (i. e. purified from the false taste of the present times) from thence (i. e. from, or by, reading and studying the writings of Cratinus, &c.)—such I wish to be my readers. Vaporo signifies to send out vapours, to evaporate: thus the metaphor is continued through both the lines.

127. Not he, who delights, &c.] Persius now marks out those who were not to be chosen for his readers.

The first class of men which he objects to, are those who can laugh at the persons and habits of philosophers; this bespeaks a despicable, mean, and sordid mind.

— Slippers of the Grecians.] Crepidas Graiorum, a peculiar sort of slippers, or shoes, worn by philosophers—here put, by synec. for the whole dress: but it is most likely, that Persius here means the philosophers themselves, and all their wise sayings and institutes; these were originally derived from Greece.

128. Sordid.] See note, No 1, above, at l. 127, ad fin.

128. Say

These too behold: if haply any thing more refined you hear, 125

Let the reader glow towards me with an ear evaporated from thence.

Not he, who delights to sport on the slippers of the Grecians,
Sordid, and who can say to the blinkard, thou blinkard:
Thinking himself somebody; because, lifted up with Italian honour,

An ædile he may have broken false measures at Aretium, 130

Nor who, arch, knows to laugh at the numbers of an account-table,

And bounds in divided dust; prepared to rejoice much,

128. Say to the blinkard, &c.] Luscus is he that has lost an eye, a one-eyed man.

Persius means those who can upbraid and deride the natural infirmities or misfortunes of others, by way of wit:

Can mock the blind: and has the wit to cry—
(Prodigious wit!)—"Why, friend, you want an eye!"

BREWSTER.

129. Thinking himself somebody.] A person of great consequence.

— Lifted up, &c.] Puffed up with self-importance, because bearing an office in some country-district of Italy; and therefore flippant of his abuse, by way of being witty, l. 127—8.

130. An ædile, &c.] An inferior kind of country-magistrate, who had jurisdiction over weights and measures, and had authority to break and destroy those which were false. Juv.
Sat. x. l. 102.

— Æretium.] A city of Tuscany famous for making earthen-ware, but, perhaps, put here for any country town.

So heminas, half sextaries, little measures holding about three quarters of a pint, are put for measures in general. Comp.
Juv. Sat. x. 101—2.

131. Nor he who, arch, &c.] Another class of people, which Persius would exclude from the number of his readers, are those who laugh at and despise all science whatsoever.

Abacus signifies a bench, slate, or table, used for accounts by arithmeticians, and for figures by mathematicians—here put for arithmetic and mathematics.

132. Bounds in divided dust.] The geometers made their demonstrations

Si Cynico barbam petulans Nonaria vellat.

His, manè, edictum ; post prandia, Callirhoën, do.

demonstrations upon dust, or sanded floors, to the end that their lines might easily be changed and struck out again—here geometry is meant.

133. Petulant Nonaria, &c.] Who think it an high joke, if they see an impudent strumpet meet a grave Cynic in the street, and pull him by the beard ; which was the greatest affront that could be offered. Comp. Hor. Sat. iii. Lib. i. l. 133—4.

The ninth hour, or our three o'clock in the afternoon, was the time when the harlots first made their appearance, hence they were called Nonariæ. Perhaps our poet may allude, in this line, to the story of Diogenes (mentioned by Athen. Lib. xiii.) who was in love with Laïs, the famous courtesan, and had his beard plucked by her.

134. In the morning, an edict.] To such people as these I assign employments suitable to their talents and characters. It has been usually thought, that edictum, here, means the prætor's edict, and that by Callirhoë is meant some harlot of that name ; and therefore this line is to be understood, as if Persius meant that these illiterate fellows should attend the forum in the morning, and the brothel in the evening : but the former seems too serious an employ for men such as he is speaking of.

Marcilius,

If petulant Nonaria should pluck a Cynic's beard.

I give to these, in the morning, an edict; after dinner, Callirhoë.

Marcilius, therefore, more reasonably, takes edictum (consonant to the phrases edictum ludorum, edictum muneris gladiatorii, &c.) to signify a programma, a kind of play-bill, which was stuck up, as ours are, in a morning; and Callirhoë to be the title of some wretched play, written on the story of that famous parricide (who slew her father because he would not consent to her marriage) by some of the writers at which this Satire is levelled, and which was announced to be performed in the evening.

q. d. Instead of wishing such to read my Satires, I consign these pretty gentlemen to the study of the play-bills in the morning, and to an attendance on the play in the evening. Thus this Satire concludes, in conformity with the preceding part of it, with lashing bad writers and their admirers.

Marcilius contends, that this line is to be referred to Nêro, against whom, as a poet, this Satire is principally, though covertly, levelled—who, by ordering bills to be distributed, called the people together, in order to hear him sing over his poems on Callirhoë.

END OF THE FIRST SATIRE.

S A T I R A II.

A R G U M E N T.

It being customary, among the Romans, for one friend to send a present to another on his birth-day—Persius, on the birth-day of his friend Macrinus, presents him with this Satire, which seems (like Juv. Sat. x.) to be founded on Plato's dialogue on prayer, called The Second Alcibiades.

The Poet takes occasion to expose the folly and impiety of those, who, thinking the gods to be like themselves, imagined that they were to be bribed into compliance with their prayers by sumptuous presents; whereas, in truth, the gods regard not these, but regard only the pure intention of an honest heart.

AD PLOTIUM MACRINUM.

HUNC, Macrine, diem numera meliore lapillo,
Qui tibi labentes apponit candidus annos.
Funde merum genio: non tu prece poscis emaci,

Line 1. Macrinus.] Who this Macrinus was does not sufficiently appear; he was a learned man, and a friend of Persius, who here salutes him on his birth-day.

— Better stone.] The antients reckoned happy days with white pebbles, and unhappy days with black ones, and at the end of the year cast up the reckoning, by which they could see how many happy, and how many unhappy days had past.

The poet here bids his friend distinguish his birth day among the happiest of his days, with a better, a whiter stone than ordinary. See Juv. Sat. xii. 1.

A R G U M E N T.

In the course of this Satire, which seems to have given occasion to the Tenth Satire of Juvenal, Persius mentions the impious and burlful requests which men make, as well as the bad means which they employ to have their wishes fulfilled.

The whole of this Satire is very grave, weighty, and instructive; and, like that of Juvenal, contains sentiments, more like a christian than an heathen.

Bishop Burnet says, that "this Satire may well pass for "one of the best lectures in divinity."

TO PLOTIUS MACRINUS.

THIS day, Macrinus, number with a better stone,
Which, white, adds to thee sliding years.

Pour out wine to your genius. You do not ask with mercenary prayer,

2. Adds to thee sliding years.] Sets one more complete year to the score, and begins another.

— Sliding years.]

Eheu fugaces Posthume, Posthume, Labuntur anni. Hor. Ode xiv. Lib. ii.

Years that glide swiftly, and almost imperceptibly away.

3. Pour out wine to your genius.] The genius was a tutelar god, which they believed to preside at their birth, whom they worshipped every year on their birth-day, by making a libation of wine. They did not slay any beast in sacrifice to their genius on that day, because they would not take away life on the day

Quæ, nisi seductis, nequeas committere divis:
 At bona pars procerum, tacita libabit acerrâ. 5
 Haud cuivis promptum est, murmurque humilesque fusurros Tollere de templis, & aperto vivere voto.
 'Mens bona, fama, fides;' hæc clarè, & ut audiat hospes.
 Illa sibi introrsum, & sub linguâ immurmurat, 'O si
 'Ebullit patruî præclarum funus!—&, O si 10
 'Sub rastro crepet argenti mihi seria, dextro
 'Hercule!—Pupillumve utinam, quem proximus hæres day on which they received it. They supposed a genius not only to preside at their birth, but to attend and protect them constantly through their life; therefore, on other days they sacrificed beasts to their genii.—Hence Hor. Lib. iii. Ode xvii. l. 14—16.

—Cras genium mero Curabis, & porco bimestri,
 Cum famulis operum solutis.

The libation of wine on their birth-day was attended also with strewing flowers. The former was an emblem of cheerfulness and festivity; the latter, from their soon fading, of the frailty and shortness of human life.

Hor. Epist. i. Lib. ii. l. 143—4.

Tellurem parco, silvanum lacte piabant,
 Floribus & vino genium memorem brevis ævi.

3. Mercenary prayer.] Emaci, from emo, to buy—i. e. with a prayer, with which, as with a bribe, or reward, you were to purchase what you pray for.

4. Which you cannot commit, &c.] Which you must offer to the gods in secret, and as if the gods were taken aside, that nobody but themselves should hear what you say to them.

Committere, here, has the sense of—to intrust, to impart.

5. A good part.] A great many, a large portion.

So Hor. Lib. i. Sat. i. l. 61. Bona pars hominum; a good many, as we say.

—Tacit censor.] Acerra properly signifies the vessel, or pan, in which the incense is burnt in sacrifice: they said their prayers as the smoke of the incense ascended; but these nobles spake so low, as not to be heard by others, so that the incense seemed silently to ascend, unaccompanied with any words of prayer. This seems to be the meaning of tacita libabit acerrâ. In short, their petitions were of such a nature, that they cared not to utter them loud enough for other people to hear them; they themselves were ashamed of them.

Which you cannot commit unless to remote gods :

But a good part of our nobles will offer with tacit center. 5

It is not easy to every one, their murmur, and low whispers

To remove from the temples, and to live with open prayer.

' A good mind, reputation, fidelity;' these clearly, that a stranger may hear.

Those inwardly to himself and under his tongue he mutters—' O if

' The pompous funeral of my uncle might bubble up!

' O if 10

' Under my rake a pot of silver might chink, Hercules be' ing propitious

' To me! or my ward, whom I the next heir

6. It is not easy, &c.] As times go, people are not very ready to utter their wishes and prayers publicly, and to remove from the temples of the gods those inward murmurs and low whispers in which their impious petitions are delivered.

7. And to live, &c.] i. e. To make it their practice to utter their vows and prayers openly, in the sight and hearing of all.

8. ' A good mind, reputation, &c.'] These things, which are laudable and commendable, and to be desired by virtuous people, these they will ask for with a clear and audible voice, so that any stander-by may hear them perfectly.

9. Those, &c.] i. e. Those things that follow (which are impious and scandalous) and which he does not care should be heard by others, he mutters inwardly.

— Under his tongue.] Keeps them within his mouth, fearing to let them pass his lips.

10. The pompous funeral.] One prays for the death of a rich uncle.

— Bubble up!] i. e. Appear in all its pomp. Ebullit, for ebullierit—metaph. from water when boiling up, which swells, as it were, and runs over.

11. A pot of silver, &c.] Another prays that he may find a vessel of hidden treasure, as he is raking his field. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. vi. l. 10.

— Hercules, &c.] He was supposed to preside over hidden treasures.

12. Or my ward, &c.] If it were not to be his lot to have his avarice gratified by finding hidden treasure, yet, says this covetous suppliant, " I have a rich orphan under my care, to " whom

‘Impello, expungam! namque est scabiosus, & acri

‘Bile tumet—Nerio jam tertia ducitur uxor.’

Hæc sanctè ut poscas, Tiberino in gurgite mergis 15
Manè caput, bis, térque; & noctem flumine purgas.

Heus age, responde; minimum est quod scire laboro:
De Jove quid sentis?—Estne ut præponere cures Hunc Cuiquam?—Cuinam? vis Staio? an, scilicet, hæres?

“whom I am heir at law, O that I could but put him out of the “way!” Expungam—blot him out.

13. Impel.] A metaph. taken from one wave driving on another, and succeeding in its place.

— He is scabby, &c.] Here is an instance of the petitioner's hypocrisy—he pretends not to wish his pupil's death, that he might inherit his estate, but out of compassion to an unhealthy young man, pretends to wish him dead, that he may be released from his sufferings, from his scrophulous disorders.

14. A third wife, &c.] Another prays for the death of his wife, that he may be possessed of all she has, and that he may get a fresh fortune by marrying again. He thinks it very hard that he can't get rid of one, when Nerius, the usurer, has been so lucky as to bury two, and is now possessed of a third. On the death of the wife, her fortune went to the husband; even what the father had settled out of his estate, if his daughter survived him.

15. That you may ask, &c.] That the gods may be propitious, and give a favourable answer to your prayers, you leave no rite or ceremony unobserved, to sanctify your person, and render yourself acceptable.

— In the river Tiber, &c.] It was a custom among the antients, when they had vows, or prayers to make, or to go about any thing of the religious or sacred kind, to purify themselves by washing in running water.

Attrectare nefas, donec me flumine vivo

Abluero— See Æn. ii. l. 719—20.

Hence the Romans washed in the river Tiber—sometimes the head, sometimes the hands, sometimes the whole body.

— You dip.] Or put under water. Those who were to sacrifice to the infernal gods only sprinkled themselves with water; but the sacrificers to the heavenly deities plunged themselves into the river, and put their heads under water. See Juv. Sat. vi. l. 522.

' Impel, I wish I could expunge ! for he is scabby, and with ' sharp

' Bile he swells. A third wife is already married by Nerius.'

That you may ask these things holily, in the river Tiber you dip. 15

Your head in the morning two or three times, and purge the night with the stream.

Consider, mind, answer (it is a small thing which I labour to know)

What think you of Jove ? is he, that you would care to prefer Him to any one ? to whom ? will you to Staius ? what !— do you doubt ?

16. In the morning.] At the rising of the sun ; the time when they observed this solemnity in honour of the celestial gods :
their ablutions in honour of the Dii Manes, and infernal gods, were performed at the setting of the sun. Juv. ubi supra.

— Two or three times.] The number three was looked upon as sacred in religious matters. Juv. ubi supra.

Terna tibi hæc primùm triplici diversa colore
Licia circumdo, terque hæc altaria circum
Æffigiem duco : numero Deus impare gaudet.

VIRG. Ecl. viii. l. 73—5 ; and note there, 75. Delph. See G. i. 345.

— Purge the night, &c.] After nocturnal pollution they washed. Comp. Deut. xxiii. 10, 11.—The ancients thought themselves polluted by the night itself, as well as by bad dreams in the night, and therefore purified themselves by washing their hands and heads every morning ; which custom the Turks observe to this day.

17. Consider, mind, &c.] The poet, having stated the impiety of these worshippers, now remonstrates with them on their insult offered to the gods. See AINSW. Heus, N^o 3.

" Come," says he, " let me ask you a short question."

18. What think you of Jove ?] What are your notions, what your conceptions of the god which you pray to, and profess to honour ?

— Is he, that you would care, &c.] Do you think him preferable to any mortal man ?

19. To whom—] do you prefer him ?

— Will you to Staius ?] Will you prefer him to Staius ?

— Do you doubt, &c.] Do you hesitate in determining ?— which is the best judge, or the best guardian of orphans, Jupiter or Staius?—From this it appears, that this Staius was some notorious wretch, who had behaved ill in both these capacities.

22. Say it to Staius.] As you must allow Staius not comparable to Jupiter, but, on the contrary, a very vile and wicked man, I would have you, that you may judge the better of the nature of your petitions, propose to Staius what you have proposed to Jupiter—how would Staius receive it?

— O Jupiter! &c. would be cry.] Even Staius, bad as he is, would be shocked and astonished, and call on Jupiter for vengeance on your head.

23. And may not Jupiter, &c.] Think you that Jupiter, then, may not, with the highest justice, as well as indignation, call on himself for vengeance on you?

24. To have forgiven.] Do you suppose that Jupiter is reconciled to your treatment of him, because you and yours are visited with no marks of divine vengeance?

26. Bowels of sheep.] Offered in sacrifice by way of expiation.

— Ergenna.] Ergennas was the name of some famous soothsayer, whose office it was to divine, by inspecting the entrails of the sacrifices.

27. A sad bidental.] When any person was struck dead by lightning, immediately the priest (aliquis senior qui publica fulgura condit, Juv. Sat. vi. l. 586.) came and buried the body, inclosed the place, and erecting there an altar, sacrificed two two-year-old sheep (bidentes)—hence the word bidental is applied by authors, indifferently, to the sacrifice, to the place, or (as here) to the person.

— In the groves.] Or woods, where the oak was rent with lightning, and where you remained unhurt. Comp. l. 24—5.

28. Jupiter offer you, &c.] Because you have hitherto escaped,

Who is the better judge? who the fittest for orphan children? 20

This, therefore, with which you try to persuade the ear of Jove,

Come, say it to Staius: O Jupiter! O good Jupiter! would he cry:

And may not Jupiter cry out upon himself?

Do you think him to have forgiven, because, when he thunders, the oak sooner

Is thrown down, by the sacred sulphur, than both you, and your house? 25

Or because, with the bowels of sheep, Ergenna commanding, You do not lie a sad, and to-be-avoided bidental, in the groves,

Therefore does Jupiter offer you his foolish beard to pluck?

Or what is it? with what reward hast thou bought the ears Of the gods? with lungs, and with greasy intrails? 30 do you imagine that you are at full liberty to insult Jupiter as you please, and this with impunity, and even with the divine permission and approbation?

Plucking or pulling a person by the beard was one of the highest marks of contempt and insult that could be offered—see Sat. i. l. 133, note; for the beard was cherished and respected as a mark of gravity and wisdom—see Juv. Sat. xiv. 12, note; and Juv. vi. l. 15, 16.

29. Or what is it? i. e. What hast thou done, that thou art in such high favour with the gods?

— With what reward, &c. With what bribe hast thou purchased the divine attention?

30. With lungs. Contemptuously put here, per meton. for any of the larger intestines of beasts offered in sacrifice.

— And with greasy intrails? Lactes signifies the small guts, through which the meat passeth first out of the stomach: perhaps so called from the lacteals, or small vessels, the mouths of which open into them to receive the chyle, which is of a white or milky colour. The poet says, unctis lactibus, because they are surrounded with fat.

The poet mentions these too in a sneering way, as if he had said—“What! do you think that you have corrupted the gods “with lungs and guts?”

Ecce avia, aut metuens divum matertera, cunis
 Exemit puerum! frontemque, atque uda labella,
 Infami digito, & lustralibus ante salivis
 Expiat; urentes oculos inhibere perita.
 Tunc manibus quatit, & spem macram; suplice voto, 35
 Nunc Licini in campos, nunc Crassi mittit in ædes.
 'Hunc optent generum rex & regina! puellæ
 'Hunc rapiant! quicquid calcaverit hic, rosa fiat!'

31. Lo! a grandmother, &c.] The poet now proceeds to expose the folly of those prayers which old women make for children.

— An aunt.] Matertera—quasi mater altera—the mother's sister, the aunt on the mother's side, as amita is on the father's side.

— Fearing the gods.] Metuens divum—superstitious; for all superstition proceeds from fear and terror: it is therefore that superstitious people are called in Greek Δεισιδαιμονες, from δειδω, to fear, and δαίμων, a dæmon, a god. See Acts xvii. 22.

32. His forehead, &c.] Persius here ridicules the foolish and superstitious rites which women observed on these occasions.

First, after having taken the infant out of the cradle, they, before they began their prayers, wetted the middle finger with spittle, with which they anointed the forehead and lips of the child, by way of expiation, and preservative against magic.

— Wet lips.] i. e. Of the child, which are usually wet with drivel from the mouth.

33. Infamous finger.] The middle finger, called infamis, from its being made use of in a way of scorn to point at infamous people. See Sat. x. l. 53, and note.

— Purifying spittle.] They thought fasting spittle to contain great virtue against fascination, or an evil eye; therefore with that, mixed with dust, they rubbed the forehead and lips by way of preservative. Thus in Petronius—"Mox turbatum
 "sputo pulverem, anus medio sustulit digito, frontemque re-
 "pugnantis signat."

— She before-hand.] i. e. Before she begins her prayers for the child.

34. Expiates.] See above note on l. 32, ad fin.

— Skilled to inhibit, &c.] Skillful to hinder the fascination of bewitching eyes. Uro signifies, lit. to burn; also to injure or destroy. Virg. G. ii. l. 196.—One sort of witchcraft was supposed to operate by the influence of the eye. Virg. Ecl. iii. 103.

35. Then

Lo! a grandmother, or an aunt fearing the gods, from the cradle

Takes a boy, and his forehead and his wet lips, With infamous finger, and with purifying spittle, she before-hand

Expiates, skilled to inhibit destructive eyes.

Then shakes him in her hands, and her slender hope, with suppliant wish, 35

She now sends into the fields of Licinius, now into the houses of Crassus.

' May a king and queen with this boy their son-in-law;
' may the girls

' Seize him; whatever he shall have trodden upon, may
' it become a rose !'

35. Then shakes him, &c.] Lifts him up, and dandles him to and fro, as if to present him to the gods.

— Her slender hope.] The little tender infant.

— With suppliant wish.] Or prayer.—Having finished her superstitious rites of lustration, she now offers her wishes and prayers for the infant.

36. She now sends, &c.] Mittit is a law term, and taken from the prætor's putting a person in possession of an estate which was recovered at law.—Here it denotes the old woman's wishing; and, in desire, putting the child in possession of great riches, having her eye on the possessions of Crassus and Licinius, the former of which (says Plutarch) purchased so many houses, that, at one time or other, the greatest part of Rome came into his hands. Licinius was a young slave of so saving a temper, that he let out the offals of his meat for interest, and kept a register of debtors. Afterwards he was made a collector in Gaul, where he acquired (as Persius expresses it, Sat. iv. l. 56, quantum non milvus oberret) "more lands than a kite could fly over."

37. King and queen wish, &c.] May he be so opulent as that even crowned heads may covet an alliance with him as a son-in-law.

37—8. Girls seize him.] May he be so beautiful and comely, that the girls may all fall in love with him, and contend who shall first seize him for her own.

38. Shall have trodden upon, &c.] This foolish, extravagant hyperbole well represents the vanity and folly of these old women, in their wishes for the children.

Ast ego nutrici non mando vota : negato,
Jupiter, hæc illi, quamvis te albata rogarit.

40

Pocis opem nervis, corpusque fidele senectæ :
Esto, age : sed grandes patinæ, tucetaque crassa
Annuerè his superos vetuère, Jovemque morantur.

Rem struere exoptas, cæso bove ; Mercuriumque Arceffis fibra : ‘ da fortunare penates !

45

‘ Da pecus, & gregibus fœtum !’—Quo, pessime, pacto, Tot tibi cum in flammis junicum omenta liquecant ?

39. But to a nurse, &c.] For my part, says Persius, I shall never leave it to my nurse to pray for my child.

39—40. Deny, O Jupiter, &c.] If she should ever pray thus for a child of mine, I beseech thee, O Jupiter, to deny such petitions as these, however solemnly she may offer them.

40. Tho’ cloth’d in white.] Though arrayed in sacrificial garments. The ancients, when they sacrificed and offered to the gods, were clothed with white garments, as emblems of innocence and purity.

41. You ask strength, &c.] Another prays for strength of nerves, and that his body may not fail him when he comes to be old.

42. Be it so—go on.] I see no harm in this, says Persius ; you ask nothing but what may be reasonably desired ; therefore I don’t find fault with your praying for these things—go on with your petitions.

— Great dishes.] But while you are praying for strength of body, and for an healthy old age, you are destroying your health, and laying in for a diseased old age, by your gluttony and luxury.

— Sausages.] Tuceta—a kind of meat made of pork or beef chopped, or other stuff, mingled with suet.

43. Have forbidden, &c.] While you are praying one way, and living another, you yourself hinder the gods from granting your wishes.

— Hinder Jove.] Prevent his giving you health and strength, by your own destroying both.

The poet here ridicules those inconsistent people, who pray for health and strength of body, and yet live in such a manner as to impair both. Nothing but a youth of temperance is likely to insure an old age of health.—This is finely touched by the masterly pen of our Shakespeare—

Tho’ I look old, yet am I strong and lusty :
For in my youth I never did apply

Hoc

But to a nurse I do not commit prayers : deny, O Jupiter, these to her, tho' cloth'd in white she should
ask. 40

You ask strength for your nerves, and a body faithful to old age :

Be it so—go on : but great dishes, and fat sausages,
Have forbidden the gods to assent to these, and hinder Jove.
You wish heartily to raise a fortune, an ox being slain, and Mercury

You invite with inwards—"grant the household gods to "make me prosperous ! 45

"Give cattle, and offspring to my flocks !"—Wretch, by what means,

When the cawls of so many young heifers can melt for you in flames ?

Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood ;
Nor did not with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility ;
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frothy, but kindly—

As you like it, Act ii. Sc. iii.

44. You wish, &c.] Another is endeavouring to advance his fortune by offering costly sacrifices, little thinking that these are diminishing what he wants to augment.

— Ox slain.] i. e. In sacrifice—in order to render the god propitious ; but you don't recollect that by this you have an ox the less.

— Mercury.] The god of gain.

45. You invite.] Arceffis—send for, as it were—invite to favour you.

— With inwards.] Extis—the entrails of beasts offered in sacrifice.

— The household gods, &c.] "Grant, O Mercury (say
"you) that my domestic affairs may prosper !" See ANSW.
Penates.

46. Give cattle, &c.] Grant me a number of cattle, and let all my flocks be fruitful, and increase !

— Wretch, by what means ?] How, thou fillicst of men, can this be ?

47. When the cawls of so many, &c.] When you are every day preventing all this, by sacrificing your female beasts before they

Et tamen hic extis, & opimo vincere farto

Intendit: 'jam crescit ager, jam crescit ovile;

' Jam dabitur, jam jam: ' donec deceptus, & exspes, 50

Perducis facies. Nam, fratres inter ahenos, they are old enough to breed, and thus, in a two-fold manner, destroying your stock?

47. The cawls.] Omentum is the cawl or fat that covers the inwards.

— Melt in flames.] Being put on the fire on the altar.

— For you.] In hopes to obtain what you want.

48. Yet this man, &c.] Thinks he shall overcome the gods with the multitude of sacrifices which he offers—this is his intention.

— With bowels.] The inwards of beasts offered in sacrifice.

— A rich pudding.] They offered a sort of pudding, or cake, made of bran, wine, and honey.

49. " Now the field increases,"] says he—fancying his land is better for what he has been doing.

— Now the sheep-fold.] " Now methinks my sheep breed better."

50. Now it shall be given, &c.] " Methinks I already see my wishes fulfilled—every thing will be given me that I asked for."

— Now presently.] " I shall not be to wait much longer."

— Till deceived, and hopeless.] Till, at length, he finds his error, and that, by hoping to increase his fortune by the multitude of his sacrifices, he has only just so far diminished it—he has nothing left but one poor solitary sesterce at the bottom of his purse, or chest; which, finding itself deceived, and hopeless of any accession to it, sighs, as it were, in vain, for the loss of its companions, which have been so foolishly spent and thrown away.

The Roman nummus, when mentioned as a piece of money, was the same with the sesterius, about one penny three farthings. The prosopopeia here is very humorous.

52. If to thee cups, &c.] Men are apt to think the gods like themselves,

And yet this man to prevail with bowels, and with a rich pudding

Intends: "Now the field increases, now the sheep-fold—
"Now it shall be given, now presently:" till deceived, and hopeless, 50

In vain the nummus will sigh in the lowest bottom.

If to thee cups of silver, and gifts wrought with rich gold I should bring, you would sweat, and from your left breast Shake out drops—your over-trembling heart would rejoice. Hence that takes place, that with gold carried in triumph you 55

Overlay the sacred faces. For, among the brazen brothers, themselves, pleased with rich and costly gifts—to such the poet now speaks.

If, saith Persius, I should make you a present of a fine piece of silver plate, or of some costly vessel of the finest gold.

53. You would sweat.] You would be so pleased and overjoyed, that you would break into a sweat with agitation.

— Left breast.] They supposed the heart to lie on the left side.

54. Shake out drops.] i. e. You would weep, or shed tears. Lachrymas excutere, to force tears. Ter. Heaut. Act i, Sc. i. l. 115.—Tears of joy would drop, as it were, from your very heart. Lachrymor præ gaudio. Ter.—Some understand lævo here in the sense of foolish, silly; as in Virg. Ecl. i. 16. Causaub.

— Your over-trembling heart, &c.] Palpitating with unusual motion, from the suddenness and emotion of your surprise and joy, would be delighted.

55. That takes place.] That notion or sentiment takes place in your mind, that, because you are so overjoyed at receiving a rich and sumptuous present of silver or gold, therefore the gods must be so too—judging of them by yourself.

— Gold carried in triumph, &c.] Hence, with the gold taken as a spoil from an enemy, and adorning the triumph of the conqueror, by being carried with him in his ovation, you overlay the images of the gods—thus complimenting the gods with what has been taken from your fellow mortals by rapine and plunder.

56. The brazen brothers.] There stood in the porch of the Palatine Apollo fifty brazen statues of the fifty sons of Ægyptus, the brother of Danaüs, who, having fifty sons, married them to

Somnia pituita qui purgatissima mittunt,

O curvæ in terras animæ, & cœlestium inanes!

the fifty daughters of Danaüs, and, by their father's order, they all slew their husbands in the night of their marriage, except Hypermnestra, who saved Lynceus. See Hor. Lib. iii. Ode xi. l. 30, &c.

These were believed to have great power of giving answers to their enquirers, in dreams of the night, relative to cures of disorders.

57. Most purged, &c.] Most clear and true, as most defecated and uninfluenced by the gross humours of the body.

58. Be the chief.] Let these be had in honour above the rest—
q. d. Bestow most on those from whom you expect most.

— A golden beard.] This alludes to the image of Æsculapius, in the temple of Epidaurum, which was supposed to reveal remedies for disorders in dreams. This image had a golden beard, which Dionysius the tyrant of Syracuse took away, saying, jestingly, that, “as the father of Æsculapius, Apollo, had no beard, it was not right for the son to have one.”

This communicating, through dreams, such remedies as were adapted to the cure of several disorders of the inquirers, was at first accounted the province of Apollo and Æsculapius only; but, on the breaking out of Egyptian superstition, Isis and Osiris were allowed to have the same power, as were also the fifty sons of Egyptus, here called the brazen brothers, from their statues of brass.

59. Driven away, &c.] Has quite expelled from the temples the plain and simple vessels made use of in the days of Numa, the first founder of our religious rites. See Juv. Sat. xi. l. 115—16.

— The Saturnian brass.] The brazen vessels which were in use when Saturn reigned in Italy.

60. Changes the vestal urns.] The pitchers, pots, and other vessels, which the vestal virgins used in celebrating the rites of Vesta, and which were antiently of earthen-ware, are now changed into gold. Comp. Juv. Sat. vi. l. 342—3.

— The Tuscan earthen-ware.] Arretium, a city of Tuscany, was famous for earthen-ware, from whence it was carried to Rome,

Let those who send dreams most purged from phlegm,
Be the chief, and let them have a golden beard.

Gold has driven away the vessels of Numa, and the Saturnian brass,
And changes the Vestal urns, and the Tuscan earthenware. 60

O souls bowed to the earth—and void of heavenly things!
What doth this avail, to place our manners in the temples,
And to esteem things good to the gods out of this wicked pulp?

This dissolves for itself Cassia in corrupted oil,

Rome, and to other parts of Italy. This was now grown quite out of use. Comp. Juv. Sat. xi. l. 109—10; and Juv. Sat. iii.
l. 168.

The poet means to say, that people, now-a-days, had banished all the simple vessels of the antient and primitive worship, and now, imagining the gods were as fond of gold as they were, thought to succeed in their petitions, by lavishing gold on their images. Comp. Is. xlv. 6.

61. O souls bowed, &c.] This apostrophe, and what follows to the end, contain sentiments worthy the pen of a Christian.

62. What doth this avail.] What profiteth it.

— To place our manners, &c.] Immittere—to admit, or suffer to enter. Our manners—i. e. our ways of thinking, our principles of action—who, because we so highly value, and are so easily influenced by rich gifts, think the gods will be so too.
See ANSW. Immitto, N° 3 and 7.

63. And to esteem, &c.] To prescribe, infer, or reckon what is good in their sight, and acceptable to them.

— Out of this wicked pulp.] From the dictates of this corrupted and depraved flesh of ours. Flesh here, as often in S. S. means the fleshly, carnal mind, influenced by, and under the dominion of, the bodily appetites—τὸ σαρκικὸν ἰνδιουμινόν, 1 Pet. ii.
11. “That which is born of the flesh is flesh,” John iii. 6.

Pulpa literally means the pulp, the fleshy part of any meat—a piece of flesh without bone. ANSW.

64. This.] This same flesh—

— Dissolves for itself Cassia, &c.] Cassia, a sweet shrub, bearing spice like cinnamon, here put for the spice: of this and other aromatics mingled with oil, which was hereby corrupted from its simplicity, they made perfumes, with which they anointed themselves.

Et Calabrum coxit, vitiato murice, vellus.

65. Hasb boiled, &c.] To give the wool a purple dye, in order to make it into splendid and sumptuous garments. See Juv. Sat. xii. 38, 39.

The best and finest wool came from Calabria. The murex was a shell-fish, of the blood of which the purple dye was made. The best were found about Tyre. See Virg. iv. 262. Hor. Epod. xii. 21.—Vitiated—i. e. corrupted to the purposes of luxury.

66. Ta scrape, &c.] This same pulp, or carnal mind, first taught men to extract pearls from the shell of the pearl-oyster, in order to adorn themselves.

—And to draw, &c.] Stringere—to bring into a body or lump (Ans. w.) the veins of gold and silver, by melting down the crude ore. Ferventis massæ—the mass of gold or silver ore heated to fusion in a furnace, and thus separating them from the dross and earthy particles.

The poet is shewing, that the same depraved and corrupt principle, which leads men to imagine the gods to be like themselves, and to be pleased with gold and silver because men are, is the inventor and contriver of all manner of luxury and sensual gratifications.

68. This also fits, &c.] This evil corrupted flesh is the parent of all sin, both in principle and practice. Comp. Rom. vii. 18—24.

—Yet uses vice.] Makes some use of vice, by way of getting some emolument from it, some profit or pleasure.

69. O ye priests, &c.] But tell me, ye ministers of the gods, who may be presumed to know better than others, what pleasure, profit, or emolument, is there to the gods, from all the gold with which the temples are furnished and decorated?

70. Truly this, &c.] The poet answers for them—"Just as much as there is to Venus, when girls offer dolls to her."—Pupa, a puppet, a baby, or doll, such as girls played with while little, and, being grown big, and going to be married, offered to Venus, hoping, by this, to obtain her favour, and to be made mothers

This also sins, it sins : yet uses vice. But ye,

O ye priests, say what gold does in sacred things ?

mothers of real children. The boys offered their bullæ to their household gods. Juv. Sat. xiii. 33, note.

71. But let us give, &c.] The poet now is about to shew with what sacrifices the gods will be pleased, and consequently what should be offered.

— A great dish.] The lanx—lit. a deep dish—signified a large censer, appropriated to the rich : but sometimes they made use of the acerra (v. 5.) a small censer appropriated to the poor.

72. The blear-eyed race, &c.] Val. Corv. Messala took his name from Messana, a city of Sicily, which was besieged and taken by him ; he was the head of the illustrious family of the Messalæ. The poet here aims at a descendent of his, who degenerated from the family, and so devoted himself to gluttony, drunkenness, and luxury of all kinds, that, in his old age, his eyelids turned inside out.

Let us offer to the gods, says Persius, that which such as the Messalæ have not to offer, however large their censers may be, or however great the quantities of the incense put within them.

73. What is just and right.] Jus is properly that which is agreeable to the laws of man—fas, that which is agreeable to the divine laws.

— Disposed.] Settled, fashioned, set in order or composed, fitted, set together, within the soul.—It is very difficult to give the full idea of compositum in this place by any single word in our language.

73—4. The sacred recesses of the mind.] The inward thoughts and affections—what St. Paul calls τα κρυπτα τῆς ἀνθρώπου.
Rom. ii. 16. Prov. xxiii. 26.

Mentis, & incoctum generoso pectus honesto.

74. A breast imbrued, &c.] Incoctum—metaph. taken from wool, which is boiled, and so thoroughly tinged with the dye. It signifies that which is infused; not barely dipped, as it were, so as to be lightly tinged, but thoroughly soaked, so as to imbibe the colour. See Virg. G. iii. 307.

75. That I may bring to the temples.] Let me be possessed of these, that I may with these approach the gods, and then a little cake of meal will be a sufficient offering. Comp. Virg. Æn. v. l. 745; and Hor. Lib. iii. Ode xxiii. l. 17, &c.

SAT. II. PERSIUS'S SATIRES. 347

Of the mind, and a breast imbrued with generous honesty—These give me, that I may bring to the temples, and I will obtain what is sought for.

END OF THE SECOND SATIRE.

S A T I R A III.

A R G U M E N T.

Perfius, in this Satire, in the person of a Stoic præceptor, upbraids the young men with sloth, and with neglect of the study of philosophy. He shews the sad consequences which will attend them throughout life, if they do not apply themselves early to the knowledge of virtue.

NEMPE hæc assidue ! Jam clarum mane fenestras Intrat, & angustas extendit lumine rimas.
 Stertimus, indomitum quod despumare Falernum

Line 1. "What—these things constantly?" The poet here introduces a philosopher, rousing the pupils under his care from their sloth, and chiding them for lying so late in bed. "What (says he) is this to be every day's practice?"

— Already the clear morning, &c.] q. d. You ought to be up and at your studies by break of day; but here you are lounging in bed at full day-light, which is now shining in at the windows of your bed-room.

2. Extends with light, &c.] Makes them appear wider, say some. But Casaubon treats this as a foolish interpretation. He says, that this is an "Hypallage. Not that the chinks are extended, or dilated, quod quidem ineptè scribunt, but the light is extended, the sun transmitting its rays through the chinks of the lattices."

Dr. Sheridan says—"this image (angustas extendit lumine rimas) very beautifully expresses the widening of a chink by the admission of light." But I do not understand how the light can be said to widen a chink, if we take the word widen in its usual sense, of making any thing wider than it was. Perhaps we may understand the verb extendit, here, as extending to view—i. e. making visible the interstices of the lattices, which, in the dark, are imperceptible to the sight, but when the morning enters become apparent. It should seem, from this passage, that the fenestraz of the Romans were lattice windows.

But

A R G U M E N T.

The title of this Satire, in some antient manuscripts, was, "The Reproach of Idleness;" though in others it is inscribed—"Against the Luxury and Vices of the Rich:"—in both of which, the Poet pursues his intention, but principally in the former.

" WHAT—these things constantly? Already the " clear morning enters
 " The windows, and extends with light the narrow chinks.
 " We snore, what to digest untamed Falernan

But the best way is to abide by experience, which is in favour of the first explanation; for when the bright sun shines through any chink or crack, there is a dazzling which makes the chink or crack appear wider than it really is. Of the first glass windows, see Jortin, Rem. vol. iv. p. 196.

3. We snore.] Stertimus—i. e. stertitis.—The poet represents the philosopher speaking in the first person, but it is to be understood in the second—"We students," says he, as if he included himself, but meaning, no doubt, those to whom he spake. Comp. Sat. i. l. 13.

— To digest untamed, &c.] Instead of rising to study, we (i. e. ye young men) are sleeping, as long as would suffice to get rid of the fumes of wine, and make a man sober, though he went to bed ever so drunk.

— To digest.] Despumare—metaph. taken from new wine, or any other fermenting liquor, which rises in froth or scum: the taking off this scum or froth was the way to make the liquor clear, and to quiet its working. Thus the Falernan, which was apt, when too much was drunk of it, to ferment in the stomach, was quieted and digested by sleep. The epithet indomitus refers to this fermenting quality of the wine.

Perhaps the master here alludes to the irregularities of these students,

Sufficiat, quinta dum linea tangitur umbrâ.

students, who, instead of going to bed at a reasonable hour and sober, sat up late drinking, and went to bed with their stomachs full of Falernan wine.

4. The line is already touched, &c.] Hypallage; for quinta linea jam tangitur umbrâ, i. e. the fifth line, the line or stroke which marks the fifth hour, is touched with the shadow of the gnomon on the sun-dial.

The antient Romans divided the natural day into twelve parts. Sun-rising was called the first hour; the third after sun-rising answers to our nine o'clock; the sixth hour was noon; the ninth answers to our three o'clock P. M. and the twelfth was the setting of the sun, which we call six o'clock P. M. The fifth hour, then, among the Romans, answers to our eleven o'clock A. M. These students slept till eleven—near half the day.

5. Lo! what do you?] What are you at—why don't you get up?

— The mad dog-star.] Canicula—a constellation, which was supposed to arise in the midst of summer, when the sun entered Leo, with us the dog-days.—This is reckoned the hottest time in the year; and the antients had a notion, that the influence of the dog-star occasioned many disorders among the human species, but especially madness in dogs.

6. Long since is ripening.] They supposed that the intense heat, at that time of the year, was occasioned by the dog-star, which rose with the sun, and forwarded the ripening of the corn. The poets followed this vulgar error, which sprang from the rising of the dog-star when the sun entered into Leo; but this effect of the particular situation of the sun at that season.

mites in this place.

—" Quick, &c.] Let some of the servants come immediately, and bring my cloaths, that I may get up.

8. Is there nobody?] Does nobody hear me call?

—" Vitreous bile swells.] He falls into a violent passion at nobody's answering.

Horace speaks of splendida bilis, clear bile—i. e. furious—in opposition to the atra bilis, black bile, which produces melancholy. This is probably the meaning of vitrea, glassy, in this place.

9. " I am split,"] says the youth, with calling so loud for somebody to come to me—

—" That you'd believe, &c.] You may well say you are ready to split, for you make such a noise, that one would think that all the asses in Arcadia were braying together, answers the philosopher. Eclipsis.—Arcadia, a midland country of Peleponnesus, very good for pasture, and famous for a large breed of asses. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 160, note.

10. Now a book.] At last he gets out of bed, dresses himself, and takes up a book.

10. Two-coloured parchment.] The students used to write their notes on parchment: the inside, on which they wrote, was white; the other side, being the outer side of the skin, on which the wool or hair grew, was of a yellow cast. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 23, note.

— The hairs, &c.] The hairs, or wool, which grew on the skin, were scraped off, and the parchment smoothed, by rubbing it with a pumice-stone.

11. Paper.] Charta signifies any material to write upon.—The antients made it of various things, as leaves, bark of trees, &c.; and the Egyptians of the flag of the river Nile, which was called papyrus—hence the word paper. Charta Pergamena, i. e. apud Pergamum inventa (Plin. Ep. xiii. 12.) signifies the parchment or vellum which they wrote upon, and which was sometimes indifferently called charta, or membrana. Comp. Hor. Sat. x. Lib. i. l. 4; and Sat. iii. Lib. ii. l. 2.

But chartæ, here, seems to mean paper of some sort, different from the membrana, l. 10.

The lazy student now takes pen, ink, and paper, in order to write.

— A knotty reed.] A pen made of a reed, which was hollow, like a pipe, and grew full of knots, at intervals, on the stalk.

12. He complains, &c.] That his ink is so thick that it hangs to the nib of his pen.

13. Cuttle-fish, &c.] This fish discharges a black liquor, which the antients used as ink.

— Vanishes with water, &c.] He first complained that his ink was too thick: on pouring water into it, to make it thinner, he now complains that it is too thin, and the water has caused all the blackness to vanish away.

14. The pipe.] i. e. The pen made of the reed.

— Doubles the diluted drops.] Now the ink is so diluted, that it comes too fast from the pen, and blots his paper. All these are so many excuses for his unwillingness to write.

And there comes into his hand paper, and a knotty reed.
Then he complains that a thick moisture hangs from the pen :
That the black cuttle-fish vanishes with water infused :
He complains that the pipe doubles the diluted drops.

15. "O wretch ! &c.] The philosopher, hearing his lazy pupil contrive so many trivial excuses for his idleness, exclaims—" O wretch, O wretched young man, who art likely to be more " wretched every day you live !"

16. "Are we come ? &c.] Are all my hopes of you, as well as those of your parents, who put you under my care, come to this !

— "Why not rather.] Than occasion all this expence and trouble about your education.

— "The tender dove.] These birds are remarkably tender when young—the old ones feed them with the half-digested food of their own stomachs.

17. "Children of nobles,] and of other great men, which are delicately nursed.

— "Require to eat pap.] Pappare is to eat pap as children. Minutus -a -um, signifies any thing lessened, or made smaller. Here it denotes meat put into the mother's, or nurse's, mouth, there chewed small, and then given to the child—as the dove to her young. Comp. the last note on l. 16.

18. "Angry at the nurse.] The word mammæ, here, refers to the mother or nurse, which the children called mamma, as they called the father tata.

This well describes the fractiousness of an humoured and spoiled child, which, because it has not immediately what it wants, flies into a passion with its nurse when she attempts to sing it to sleep, and will not suffer her to do it. See ANSW. Lallo.

The philosopher sharply reproves his idle pupil. Rather, says he, than come to school, you should have staid in the nursery, and have shewn your childish perverseness there rather than here.

19. "Can I study with such a pen ?"] The youth still persists in his frivolous excuses, totally unimpressed by all that his master has said.—“Blame the pen, don’t blame me—can any mortal “write with such a pen?”

19. “Whom do you deceive?”] I should suppose, that cui verba? is here eclipical, and that das, or existimas dare, is to be understood. Verba dare is to cheat or deceive; and here the philosopher is representing his pupil, who is framing trivial excuses for his unwillingness to study, as a self-deceiver—tibi luditur, saith he, in the next line.

19—20. Those shifts.] Ambages—shifts, prevaricating, shuffling excuses.

—Repeat.] Succinis.—The verb succino signifies to sing after another, to follow one another in singing or saying—here properly used, as expressing the repetition of his foolish excuses, which followed one another, or which he might be said to repeat one after the other.

—‘Tis you are beguiled.’] Luditur here is used impersonally; as concurritur, Hor. Sat. i. Lib. i. l. 7.

—Thoughtless you run out.] Amens—foolish, silly, out of one’s wits (from a priv. and mens)—so, unthinking, without thought. You run out—effluvis—metaph. from a bad vessel, out of which the liquor leaks. You, foolish and unthinking as you are, are wasting your time and opportunity of improvement, little thinking, that, like the liquor from a leaky vessel, they are insensibly passing away from you—your very life is gliding away, and you heed it not.

21. You’ll be despised.] By all sober, thinking people.

—A pot, &c.] Any vessel, made of clay that is not well tempered—viridi limo, which is apt to chap and crack in the fire—non cocta, not baked as it ought to be—will answer badly, when sounded by the finger, and will proclaim, by its cracked and imperfect sound, its defects.

Thus will it be with you, none will ever converse with you, or put you to the proof, but you will soon make them sensible of your deficiency in wisdom and learning, and be the object of their contempt.

23. Wet and soft clay.] The poet still continues the metaphor.

As wet and soft clay will take any impression, or be moulded into

HOR. Epist. ii. Lib. ii. l. 7—8:

23. Hasten'd.] Now, now you are young, you are to lose no time, but immediately to be begun with.

24. Formed incessantly, &c.] The metaphor still continues. As the wheel of the potter turns, without stopping, till the piece of work is finished, so ought it to be with you; you ought to be taught incessantly, till your mind is formed to what it is intended, and this with strict discipline, here meant by acri rotâ.

——Paternal estate, &c.] But perhaps you will say, "Where is there occasion for all this?—I am a man of fortune, and have a sufficient income to live in independency; therefore why all this trouble about learning?"

25. Moderate quantity, &c.] Far signifies all manner of corn which the land produces; here, by metonym. the land itself—far modicum, a moderate estate, a competency.

——A salt-cellar without spot.] The ancients had a superstition about salt, and always placed the salt-cellar first on the table, which was thought to consecrate it; if the salt was forgotten, it was looked on as a bad omen. The salt-cellar was of silver, and descended from father to son—see HOR. Ode xvi. Lib. ii. l. 13, 14.—But here the salinum, per synec. seems to stand for all the plate which this young man is supposed to have inherited from his father, which he calls purum and sine labe, either from the pureness of the silver, or from the care and neatness with which it was kept, or from the honest and fair means by which the father had obtained that and all the rest of his possessions.

26. What can you fear?]—say you, who are possessed of so much property?

—You have a dish, &c.] Patella—a sort of deep dish, with broad brims, used to put portions of meat in that were given as sacrifice.

Before eating, they cut off some part of the meat, which was first put into a pan, then into the fire, as an offering to the Lares, which stood on the hearth, and were supposed the guardians of both house and land, and to secure both from harm: hence the poet says—cultrix secura.

q. d. You have not only a competent estate in land and goods, but daily worship the guardian gods, who will therefore protect both—what need you fear?

27. Is this enough?] To make you happy.

—May it become you.] Having reason, as you may think, to boast of your pedigree, can you think it meet—

—To break your lungs, &c.] To swell up with pride, till you are ready to burst, like a man that draws too much air at once into his lungs.

28. A thousandth, derive, &c.] Millefime, for tu millefimus, antiptosis; like trabeate, for tu trabeatus, in the next line—because you can prove yourself a branch of some Tuscan family, a thousand off from the common stock.—The Tuscans were accounted of most antient nobility. Horace observes this, in most of his compliments to Mæcenas, who was derived from the old kings of Tuscany. See Ode i. Lib. i. l. r, & al. freq.

29. Censor, &c.] The Roman knights, attired in the robe called trabea, were summoned to appear before the censor (see ARIST. Censor), and to salute him in passing by, as their names were called over. They led their horses in their hand.

Are you to boast, says the philosopher to his pupil, because the censor is your relation (tuum), and that when you pass in procession before him, with your knight's robe on, you may claim kindred with him?

The word phaleræ -arum, signifies trappings, or ornaments, for horses; also a sort of ornament worn by the knights: but these no more ennobled the man, than those did the horse.

30. I know you intimately, &c.] Inside and out, as we say; therefore you can't deceive me.

31. Does it not shame you, &c.] Do you feel no shame at your way of life, you that are boasting of your birth, fortune, and quality, and yet leading the life of a low profligate mechanic?

Natta signifies one of a sorry, mean occupation, a dirty mechanic. But here the poet means somebody of this name, or at least who deserved it by his profligate and worthless character. See Hor. Sat. vi. Lib. i. l. 124; and Juv. Sat. viii. l. 95.

32. He is stupefied with vice.] He has not all his faculties clear, and capable of discernment, as you have, therefore is more excusable than you are. By long contracted habits of vice he has stupefied himself.

— Fat hath increased, &c.] Pingue, for pinguedo. These words are, I conceive, to be taken in a moral sense; and by fibris, the inwards or intrails, is to be understood the mind and understanding, the judgment and conscience, the inward man, which, like a body overwhelmed with fat, are rendered torpid, dull, and stupid, so as to have no sense and feeling of the nature of evil remaining. See Ps. cxix. 70, former part.

33. He is not to blame.] i. e. Comparatively. See Juv. Sat. ii. 1. 15—19.

— He knows not, &c.] He is insensible of the sad consequences of vice, such as the loss of reputation, and of the comforts of a virtuous life. He has neither judgment to guide him, nor conscience to reprove him.

34. Overwhelmed.] Sunk into the very depths of vice, like one sunk to the bottom of the sea.

34. Bubble again, &c.] i. e. He does not emerge, rise up again. Metaph. from divers, who plunge to the bottom of the water, and, when they rise again, make a bubbling of the surface as they approach the top.

Therefore, O young man, beware of imitating, by thine idleness and mispending of time, this wretched man, lest thou shouldst bring thyself into the same deplorable state.

37. Imbued with fervent poison.] Tinâta—imbued, full of, abounding (met.) with the inflaming venom of cruelty, which may be called the poison of the mind, baleful and fatal as poison in its destructive influence.

38. Let them see virtue.] Si virtus humanis oculis conspiceretur, miros amores excitaret sui. SENECA. This would be the case with the good and virtuous : but it would have a contrary effect towards such as are here mentioned ; it would fill them with horror and dismay, and inflict such remorse and stings of conscience, as to prove the greatest torment which they could endure.

39. The Sicilian bullock, &c.] Alluding to the story of Phalaris's brazen bull. Perillus, an Athenian artificer, made a figure of a bull in brass, and gave it to Phalaris, tyrant of Syracuse, as an engine of torment: the bull was hollow; a man put into it, and set over a large fire, would, as the brass heated and tormented him, make a noise which might be supposed to imitate the roaring of a bull. The tyrant accepted the present, and ordered the experiment to be first tried on the inventor himself. Comp. Juv. Sat. xv. 122, note.

40. The sword hanging, &c.] Damocles, the flatterer of Dionysius, the Sicilian tyrant, having greatly extolled the happiness of monarchs, was ordered, that he might be convinced of his mistake, to be attired, as a king, in royal apparel; to be seated at a table spread with the choicest viands, but withal, to have a naked sword hung over his head, suspended by a single hair, with the point downwards; which so terrified Damocles, that he could neither taste of the dainties, nor take any pleasure in his magnificent attendance.

41. Purple neck, &c.] i. e. Damocles, who was placed under the point of the suspended sword, and magnificently arrayed in royal purple garments. Meton.—Purpureas cervices, for purpuream cervicem—synec.

41—2. "I go, I go, &c."] A person within the bull of Phalaris would not utter more dreadful groans; nor one seated like Damocles, under the sharp point of a sword, suspended over his head by a single horse-hair, would not feel more uneasy, than the man who is desperate with guilt, so as to give himself over for 42—3. Within unhappy.] Having an hell, as it were, in his conscience.

43. Turn pale.] Palleo literally signifies to be pale—as this often arises from fear and dread, palleo is used to denote fearing, to stand in fear of, per meton. So Hor. Lib. iii. Ode xxvii.
l. 27—8.

——Mediasque fraudes

Palluit audax.

In the above passage of Horace, palleo, though a verb neuter, is used actively, as here by Persius ; likewise before, Sat. i.
l. 124, where palles is used metonymically for hard studying, which occasions paleness of countenance.

—— Nearest wife, &c.] His conscience tormented with the guilt of crimes, which he dares not reveal to the nearest friend that he has, not even to the wife of his bosom, who is nearest of all.

44. Be/mear'd my eyes, &c.] The philosopher here relates some of his boyish pranks. I used, says he, when I was a little boy, and had not a mind to learn my lesson, to put oil into my eyes, to make them look bleary, that my master might suppose they really were so, and excuse me my task.

45—6. Great words of dying Cato.] Cato of Utica is here meant, who killed himself, that he might not fall into the hands of Julius Cæsar, after the defeat of Pompey. His supposed last deliberation with himself before his death, whether he should stab himself, or fall into the hands of Cæsar, was given as a theme for the boys to write on ; then they were to get the declamation, which they composed, by heart, and repeat it by way of exercising them in eloquence.

46. Much to be praised.] It was the custom for the parents and their friends to attend on these exercises of their children, which the master was sure to commend very highly, by way of flattering the parents with a notion of the progress and abilities of their children, not without some view, that the parents should compliment the master on the pains which he had taken with his scholars.

46. Insane.] This does not mean that the master was mad, but that, in commending and praising such puerile performances, and the vehemence with which he did it, he did not act like one that was quite in his right senses.

47. Sweating.] i. e. With the eagerness and agitation of his mind, that I might acquit myself well before him and the friends which he might bring to hear me declaim. See above, note on l. 46, N° 1.

48. With reason, &c.] Jure—not without cause.—q. d. My father might well sweat with anxiety, for instead of studying how to acquit myself with credit on these occasions, it was the height of my ambition to know the chances of the dice, play at chuck, and whip a top, better than any other boy.

49. Lucky side, &c.] Dexter, lucky, fortunate—from dexter, the right hand, which was supposed the lucky side, as sinister, the left, was accounted unlucky.

The six—the six—the highest number on the dice, which won.

— Mischievous ace, &c.] The ace was the unluckiest throw on the dice, and lost all. See AINSW. Canicula, N° 5.

It was the summit of his wish to be able to calculate the chances of the dice ; as, what he should win by throwing a six, and what he should lose if he threw an ace. How much a six, ferret, might bring, i. e. add, contribute to his winnings—how much the ace, raderet, might scrape off, i. e. diminish, or take away from them. Metaph. from diminishing a thing, or lessening its bulk by scraping it.

50. Neck of the narrow jar.] Orca signifies a jar, or like earthen

I made it my study, says he, to understand the game of the arca, and to chuck so dextrously as not to miss the mouth, however narrow the neck might be.

51. The top.] Buxus—lit. the box-tree, box-wood.—As the children's tops were made of this, therefore, per meton. it is used to denote a top, as well as any thing else made of box-wood. Consistently with his plan, he was determined to excel, even in whipping a top.

52. Unexperienced, &c.] The philosopher makes use of what he has been saying, by way of remonstrance with his pupil.—You, says he, are not a child as I was then, therefore it does not become you to invent excuses to avoid your studies, in order to follow childish amusements—you know better, you have been taught the precepts of wisdom and moral philosophy, and know by experience the difference between right and wrong.

— Crooked morals.] Morals which deviate from the strait rule of right. Metaph. from things that are bent, bowed, crooked, and out of a strait line.

53. Wise portico.] Meton. the place where wisdom is taught, put for the teachers. The Stoics were so called, from στοα, a portico in Athens, spacious, and finely embellished, where they used to meet and dispute.

— Darub'd over, &c.] On the walls of the portico were painted the battles of the Medes and Persians with the Athenians, who, with their kings Xerxes and Darius, were defeated by Miltiades, Leonidas, and Themistocles, Athenian generals, at Marathon, Thermopylæ, and on the coast of Salamis.

— Trowzer'd Medes.] The bracca was a peculiar dress of the Medes, which, like trowzers, reached from the loins to the ankles. See Juv. Sat. ii. l. 169, note.

And to thee, the letter, which hath sever'd the Samian branches,

Hath shewn the path rising with the right-hand limit.

Do you still snore? and does your lax head, with loosen'd joining,

54. Sleepless youth.] The young men who follow the strict discipline of the Stoics, and allow themselves but little sleep, watching over their studies night and day.

— Shorne.] After the manner of the Stoics, who did not suffer their hair to grow long. See Juv. Sat. ii. l. 14, 15.

55. Bean-pods.] Siliqua is the hulk, pod, or shell of a bean, pea, or the like; also the pulse therein: put here to denote the most simple and frugal diet. Juv. Sat. xi. l. 58.

— A great pudding.] Polenta—barley-flour, dried at the fire and fried, after soaking in water all night. AINSW. This made a sort of fried pudding, or cake, and was a kind of coarse food.

56. And to thee, the letter, &c.] The two horns, or branches, as Persius calls them, of the letter Y, were chosen, by Pythagoras, to demonstrate the two different paths of virtue and vice, the right branch leading to the former, the left to the latter; it was therefore called his letter: and Persius calls the two branches, into which the Y divides itself, Samios, from Samos, an island in the Ionian Sea, where Pythagoras was born, who hence was called the Samian philosopher, and the Y the Samian letter.

57. Shewn the path rising, &c.] i. e. He had been well instructed in the doctrine of Pythagoras, concerning the way to virtue.

Litera Pythagoræ discrimine secta bicorni, Humanæ vitæ speciem præferre videtur. MART.

58. Do you still snore.] Thou, who hast been taught better things, from the principles and practices of the Stoics and Pythagoreans, art thou sleeping till almost noon. See l. 4.

— Your lax head, &c.] In sleep, the muscles which raise the head, and keep it upright, are all relaxed, so that the head

59. Yawn, &c.] From the sleepiness and fatigue occasioned by yesterday's debauch are you yawning as if your jaws were ripped asunder? Dissutis—metaph. from the parting, or gaping, of things sewed together, when unstitched, or ripped asunder. Mala signifies either the cheek, or the jaw-bone.

Oscitat hesternum. Græcism.—q. d. Yawn forth yesterday's debauch.

Oscitando evaporat, & edormit hesternam crapulam.

MARSHAL.

60. Is there any thing, &c.] Have you any pursuit, end, or point in view?

—Direct your bow?] What do you aim at? Metaph. taken from an archer's aiming at a mark.

61. Follow crows, &c.] Or do you ramble about, you know not why, nor whither, like idle boys, that follow crows to pelt them with potsherds and mud, in order to take them?—(as we should say, to lay salt upon their tails.) A proverbial expression to denote vain, unprofitable, and foolish pursuits.

62. Live from the time.] Ex tempore—without any fixed or premeditated plan, and looking no farther than just the present moment.

63. In vain hellebore, &c.] The herb hellebore was accounted a great cleanser of noxious humours, therefore administered in dropsies.

When the skin is swollen with a dropsy, it is too late to begin with remedies, in very many cases.

64. Prevent, &c.] The wisest way is to prevent the disorder by avoiding the causes of it, or by checking its first approaches. Occurrere—meet it in its way to attack you.

Principiis obsta: sero medicina paratur,
Cum mala per longas invaluere moras,

OVID.

65. What

Yawn from what happen'd yesterday, with cheeks unfew'd in all parts ?

Is there any thing whither you tend ? and to what do you direct your bow ? 60

Or do you follow crows up and down with a potsherd and mud,

Careless whither your foot may carry you ; and do you live from the time ?

In vain hellebore, when now the sickly skin shall swell,
You may see people asking for. Prevent the coming disease ;
And what need is there to promise great mountains to Craterus ? 65

Learn, O miserable creatures, and know the causes of things,
What we are, and what we are engender'd to live : what order is given, and by what way the turning of the goal, and of the water, may be easy :

65. What need is there, &c. What need have you to let the distemper get such an head, as that you may be offering mountains of gold for a cure. Craterus was the physician of Augustus—put here for any famous and skilful practitioner.

The poet, here, is speaking figuratively, and means, that what he says of the distempers of the body should be applied to those of the mind ; of which all he says is equally true.

The first approaches of vice are to be watched against, and their progress prevented ; otherwise, if disregarded till advanced into habits, they may be too obstinate for cure. Comp. l. 32—4.

66. Learn, &c. Here the philosopher applies what he has been saying, by way of reproof and remonstrance, in a way of inference—Learn then, says he, ye miserable youths, who are giving way to sloth, idleness, and neglect of your studies—learn, before it be too late, the causes, the final causes of things, which are the great objects of moral philosophy, which teacheth us the causes and purposes for which all things were made.

67. What we are. Both as to body and soul ; how frail and transitory as to the one, how noble and exalted as to the other.

— What we are engender'd, &c. To what end and purpose we are begotten, in order to live in this world, and what life we are to lead.

67—8. What order is given. In what rank or degree of life we are placed.

68. By what way the turning, &c. Metaph. to denote the wise,

Quis modus argenteo : quid fas optare : quid asper
 Utile nummus habet : patriæ, carisque propinquis, 70
 Quantum elargiri deceat : quem te Deus esse Juffit ; & humana quâ parte locatus es in re—

wife, well-ordered, and well-directed management, and right conduct of our affairs ; as charioteers in the circus used all their care and management in turning the meta, or goal, so as to avoid touching it too nearly. To touch it with the inward wheel of the chariot, yet so as but to touch it, was the choice art of the charioteer : this they called stringere metam ; as to escape the danger in the performance of it they called evitare metam.

Metaque servidis

Evitata rotis. Hor. Ode i.

If they performed not this very dextrously, they were in danger of having the chariot and themselves dashed to pieces.

68. And of the water.] Another metaphor to the same purpose, alluding to the naumachia, or ship-races, wherein there were likewise placed meta; and the chief art was, when they came to the meta, to tack their ship so dextrously, as to sail as near as possible round it, yet so as to avoid running against it. See Æn. v. 129—31.

It was one part of moral philosophy, to teach the attainment of the best end, by the safest, easiest, and best means, avoiding all difficulties and dangers as much as possible.

69. What measure to money.] What limits or bounds to put to our desires after it, so as to avoid covetousness.

— What it is right to wish.] Or pray for. See Sat. ii. per tot.

69—70. Rough money, &c.] The true use of money, for this alone can make it useful. Asper nummus is coined gold or silver ; so called from the roughness which is raised on the surface by the figures or letters stamped on it.

Not only money, but all wrought or chased silver or gold, is signified by the epithet asper.

Vasa aspera.

Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 62.

Cymbiaque argento perfecta atque aspera signis.

Æn. v. l. 267.

70. Our country, &c.] What we owe, and, consequently, what it becomes us to pay, to our country, our relations, and friends, &c.

71. Whom

What measure to money—what it is right to with—what rough

Money has that is useful. To our country, and to dear

How much it may become to give; whom the Deity com-

Learn:—nor be envious, that many a jar stinks

In a rich store, the fat Umbrians being defended,

And pepper, and gammons of bacon, the monuments of a Marsian client, 75

71. Whom the Deity commanded, &c.] Quem—what manner of person it is the will of heaven you should be in your station.

72. In what part placed, &c.] Locatus. Metaph. from the placing people according to their rank on the benches at the theatres; or from soldiers, who are placed in particular stations, as centinels, &c. which they must not forsake, but by leave, or order, of the commander. Thus the Stoics taught, that every man was placed, or stationed, in some destined part of the human system (humanâ re) which he must not quit at his own will and pleasure, but solely by the permission or command of the Deity.

73. Learn.] Get a thorough, practical knowledge of the above-mentioned important particulars, and then you need not envy any body.

— A jar stinks, &c.] Nor envy any great lawyer the presents which are made him, of such quantities of provisions, that they grow stale and putrid before he can consume them. Pe- nus -i, or -ûs, signifies a store of provisions. ANSW.

74. Fat Umbrians.] The Umbrian and the Marsian were the most plentiful of all the provinces in Italy.

— Being defended.] Ably and strenuously, in some great cause, in which they were defendents—they sent presents of provisions to their counsel, and this in such quantities, that they could not use them while they were good.

75. And pepper, &c.] And that there is pepper, &c. in the lawyer's store.—The poet means to ridicule such vile presents, as after him Juvenal did. See Juv. Sat. vii. 119—21.

— Monuments, &c.] Monumentum, or monimentum (from moneo) a memorial of any person or thing. The poet calls these presents of the Marsians, moniments, or memorials of them, because they were the produce of their country, and bespoke from whence they came as presents, to refresh their counsel's

sel's memory concerning his Marſian clients, who were, perhaps, plaintiffs in the cause against the Umbri.

76. Because the pilchard, &c.] Because a second jar of pickled herrings, or pilchards, was sent, before the first that had been sent was all used.

What fish the mæna was is not certain, but something, we may suppose, of the herring, pilchard, or anchovy kind, which was pickled, and put up in jars.

The Stoics were no friends to the lawyers; not that they condemned the profession itself, but because it induced men to sell their voices, in order to gratify their covetous desire of gain, which, by the way, could not be very considerable, if it consisted only in such fees as are above mentioned. Comp. Juv. Sat. vii. 106—121.

However, Persius makes his philosopher, in his discourse to his pupils, take an opportunity of ridiculing the lawyers, with no little contempt and severity, by telling the young men, that, if possessed of all the valuable principles of moral philosophy, they need not envy the fees of the lawyers, which, by the way, he represents in the most ridiculous and contemptible light.

77. Here some one, &c.] The poet, here, represents the philosopher as anticipating some objections which might be made to his doctrines, on the subject of studying philosophy, which he does, by way of answering them; and thus he satirizes the neglect and contempt of philosophy by the Roman people, and shews the fallacy and absurdity of their arguments against it.

— Stinking centurions.] Hircosus, from hircus, a goat, signifies stinking, rammish, smelling like a goat.

The centurions, and the lower part of the Roman soldiery, were very slovenly, seldom pulled off their clothes, and wore their beards, which they neglected, so that, by the nastiness of their persons, they smelt rank like goats.

Persius makes one of these the spokesman, by which he means, doubtless, to reflect on the opponents, as if none could be of their party but such a low, dirty, ignorant fellow as this.

78. "What I know, &c.] The foundation of all contempt of knowledge is self-sufficiency.

I know,

And because the pilchard has not yet failed from the first jar.

Here some one, of the stinking race of centurions,
May say; "What I know is enough for me. I don't care
"To be what Arcefilas was, and the wretched Solons,
"With the head awry, and fixing the eyes on the ground, 80
"When murmurs with themselves, and mad silence they are
"gnawing,
"And words are weighed with a stretch'd-out lip,

I know enough to answer my purpose, says the centurion; I don't want to be wiser.

79. Arcefilas.] An Æolian by birth, and scholar to Polemon; afterward he came to Athens, and joined himself to Crantor, and became the founder of an academy. He opposed Zeno's opinions, and held, that nothing could be certainly known.

Persius, probably, who was a Stoic, means here to give him a rub, by supposing this ignorant centurion to mention him as a great man.

— Wretched Solons.] Solon was one of the wise men of Greece, and the great lawgiver at Athens.

I would not give a farthing, says the centurion, to be such a philosopher as Arcefilas, or as wise as Solon, who was always making himself miserable with labour and study, or indeed as any such people as Solon was—(Solones.)

80. Head awry.] An action which the philosophers much used, as having the appearance of modesty and subjection. See Hor. Sat. v. Lib. ii. l. 92.

— Fixing the eyes on the ground.] As in deep thought. Figentes lumine terram. Hypallage—for figentes lumina in terram.

81. Murmurs with themselves.] Persons in deep meditation are apt sometimes to be muttering to themselves.

— Mad silence, &c.] They observed a silence, which, being attended with reclining the head, fixing their eyes on the ground, and only now and then interrupted by a muttering between the teeth, as if they were gnawing or eating their words, made those who saw them take them for madmen, for they appeared like melancholy mad. Perhaps rabiosa silentia may allude to the notion of mad-dogs, who are supposed never to bark.

82. Words are weighed, &c.] Trutinantur—metaph. from weighing in scales: to these philosophers appear to be balancing, i. e. deeply considering, their words, with the lip pouted out; an action frequently seen in deep thought.

"Ægroti veteris meditantés somnia: gigni

83. Meditating the dreams, &c.] Sick men's dreams are proverbial for thoughts which are rambling and incoherent; as such the centurion represents the thoughts and researches of these philosophers: of this he gives an instance—

83—4. Nothing can be produced, &c.] q. d. Ex nihilo nil fit.—This was looked on as an axiom among many of the ancient philosophers, and so taken for granted, that the centurion is here supposed to deride those, who took the pains to get at it by study, as much as we should do a man who should labour hard to find out that two and two make four.

But we are taught, that God made the world out of matter, which had no existence till he created it, contrary to the blind and atheistical notion of the eternity of the world, or of the world's being God, as the Stoics and others taught.

85. Is this what you study?] Palles—lit. art pale. See note on Sat. i. l. 124.

— Should not dine?] Is it for this, that you philosophers half-starve yourselves with fasting, that your heads may be clear.

Mente uti rectè non possumus multo cibo & potione completi. Cic. Tusc. Quæst. 5. Quis for aliquis—lit. some one.

86. The people laugh at this.] At these words the people, who are the supposed hearers of this centurion, burst into a horse-laugh.

— The brawny youth, &c.] The stout, brawny young fellows, the soldiers, who stood around, were highly delighted with the centurion's jokes upon the philosophers, and with repeated loud laughter proclaimed their highest approbation.

87. Tremulous laughs.] Cachinnus signifies a loud laugh, particularly in derision or scorn—tremulos denotes the trembling or shaking of the voice in laughter, as ha! ha! ha!

— Wrinkling nose.] In laughter the nose is drawn up in wrinkles. See Sat. i. l. 41, note.

88. Inspect, &c.] The philosopher having ended the supposed speech of the centurion against the study of philosophy, now relates a story, by way of answer; in order to shew, that a man who

"Jaws heavy breath abounds: inspect, I pray you"—
Who says to a physician;—being order'd to rest,—after 90
A third night hath seen his veins to run composed, who rejects and ridicules the principles of philosophy, which are to heal the disorders of the mind, acts as fatal a part, as he who, with a fatal distemper in his body, should reject and ridicule the advice of a physician, even act against it, and thus at last destroy himself. The qui, l. 90, is a relative without an antecedent, but may be supplied thus—

Let us suppose a man, who finding himself ill, says to a physician, "Pray, doctor, feel my pulse, observe my case, examine
"what is the matter with me."—Inspice.

88. I know not why, &c.] I don't know how or what it is, but I find an unusual fluttering of my heart.

89. Heavy breath abounds.] I feel an heaviness and oppression of breath, a difficulty of breathing: which seems here meant, as quickness of pulse and difficulty of breathing are usual symptoms of feverish complaints, especially of the inflammatory kind; also a foetid smell of the breath, which gravis also denotes.

— Inspect, I pray you.] Feeling himself ill, and not knowing how it may end, he is very earnest for the physician's advice, and again urges his request.

So would it be with regard to philosophy; if men felt, as they ought, the disorders of their mind, and dreaded the consequences, they would not despise philosophy, which is the great healer of the distempered mind, but apply to it as earnestly as this sick man to the physician.

90. Order'd to rest.] Being ordered by the physician to go to bed, and keep himself quiet.

90—1. After a third night.] The patient, after about three days observance of the doctor's prescription, finds his fever gone, the symptoms vanished, and his pulse quite composed and calm.
As soon as he finds this, he forgets his physician, and his danger, and falls to eating and drinking again as usual.

Surrentina vina caput non tenent. PLIN. xxiii. c. i.

therefore, drunk in a small quantity, might not have been hurtful; especially as this kind of wine was very old, and therefore very soft and mild, before it was drunk.

— A flagon moderately thirsting.] Persons who thirst but little, drink but little: this idea seems to be used here, metaphorically, to denote a flagon that did not require much to fill it—i. e. a moderate sized flagon, but yet holding enough to hurt a man recovering from sickness, if drunk all at one meal, and particularly before bathing, as seems to be the case here.

93. About to bathe.] Intending to bathe, which, after much eating and drinking, was reckoned very unwholesome. Comp. Juv. Sat. i. l. 142—4.

94. "Ho! good man, &c."] Away, after an hearty meal, with his belly-full of wine and victuals (l. 98.) he goes to the baths, where his physician, happening to meet him, accosts him with a friendly concern, and mentions to him some symptoms, which appeared as if he had a dropsy.

— "You are pale,"] says the physician; you look ill.

— "It is nothing."] O, says the spark, I am very well—nothing ails me.

— "Have an eye, &c."] says the physician—be it what it may that may occasion such a paleness, I'd have you take care of it in time.

95. "Yellow skin, &c."] Lutea pellis—the skin of a yellow cast, like the yellow jaundice, which often precedes a dropsy.

— "Silently rises."] Tacitè—insensibly, by little and little, though you may not perceive it—quasi sensim, rises, swells.

96. "You are pale, &c."] says the spark, in a huff, to the physician; you are paler than I am—pray look to yourself.

—"Do you remain?"] "Do you presume to take his

98. Turgid with dainties.] Having his stomach and bowels full of meat and drink.

—A white belly.] When the liver, or spleen, is distempered, as in the dropsy, and the chyle is not turned into blood, it circulates in the veins and small vessels of the skin, and gives the whole body a white or pallid appearance. Thus Hor. Lib.
 ii. Qde ii.

Crescit indulgens sibi dirus hydrops,
 Nec sitim pellit, nisi causa morbi
 Fugerit venis, & aquosus albo Corpore languor.

—Is bathed.] i. e. He persists in going into the bath in this manner, notwithstanding the warning which had been given him.

99. His throat slowly exhaling, &c.] The fumes of the meat and drink ascend out of the stomach into the throat, from whence they leisurely discharge themselves in filthy steams. Mephitis signifies a stink, particularly a damp, or strong sulphurous smell arising from corrupted water. See Æn. vii. l. 84. Me-phitis was a name of Juno, because she was supposed to preside over stinking exhalations.

100. Triental.] A little vessel, which was a third part of a larger, and held about a gill ; this he has in hand full of warm wine, but it is shook out of his hand by the trembling with which he is seized.

101. His uncover'd teeth, &c.] His face being convulsed, the lips are drawn asunder, and discover his teeth, which grind or gnash—this is frequent in convulsion-fits.

102. Greasy soups, &c.] Pulmentarium—chopped meat, with pottage or broth—Ainsw. which undigested meat, vomited up, resembles. He was seized with a violent vomiting, and brought up all the dainties which he had filled his stomach with before he went into the bath.

— From his loose lips.] Hippocrat. in Prognostic. says, that when the lips appear loose and hanging down, it is a deadly sign.

103. Hence the trumpet.] Of this intemperance he dies. The funerals of the rich were attended with trumpets and lights—the poor had only tibæ, small pipes which played on the occasion.

— This happy fellow.] Beatulus—dim. from beatus, happy. Iron.

103—4. On an high bed, &c.] Laid on a high bier.—Compositus here seems to express what we mean by laying out a corpse.

104. Dawbed over, &c.] After washing the corpse with water, they anointed it with perfumed ointment, of which the amomum, an aromatic shrub, which grew in Armenia, furnished the chief ingredient.—The amomum was used in embalming. Hence momy or mummy. See Ainsw.

105. His rigid heels, &c.] The Romans always carried the dead heels foremost, noting thereby their last and final departure from their house. Rigid—i. e. stiff with death.

He shakes out of his hands : his uncover'd teeth crafhed,
 Then the greasy soups fall from his loofe lips :
 Hence the trumpet, the candles : and, at laft, this happy felthe wretched libertine, who rejected his phyfician's advice, and proceeded in his abfurd courfes, till he fixed a diforder upon him which brought him to the grave, he meant to represent the conduct of thofe who defpifed the philofophers, thofe phyficians of the mind, and fet at nought the precepts which they taught, till, by a continuance in their vices, their cafe became desperate, and ended in their deffruftion.

However, the opponent is fupposed to underftand what the philofopher faid, in his ftory of the libertine, in a mere literal and grofs fenfe, and is therefore represented as faying—“ What's all this to the purpofe ? What is this to me ? I am “ not fick—I don't want a phyfician—try, feel my pulfe.”

108. Nothing is hot here.] There's no signs of any feverish heat.

— Touch the extremes, &c.] You'll find there the natural heat ; no coldness as in the feet and hands of a dying man.

109. " If haply money be seen."] Here the philosopher explains himself, and seems to say, " I grant that your bodily health is good, but how is your mind? does not this labour under the diseases of covetousness, fleshly lust, intemperance, fear, and anger? As a proof of this, let me ask you, if a large sum of money comes in view, or your neighbour's handsome daughter should smile upon you—does your heart move calmly as it ought, do you feel no desire of possessing either?"

111. There is placed, &c.] What think you of a vile dish of hard, half-boiled cabbage, or coleworts, and coarse bread, such as the common people eat. Farina is lit. meal or flour ; here, by meton. the bread itself which is made of it.—Shaken through the sieve of the people—i. e. of the poorer sort, who used coarse sieves, which let more of the bran and husks through, and therefore their bread was coarser than that of the gentry.

113. Try your jaws.] Whether they can devour such coarse fare, or whether you would not find yourself as unable to chew, or swallow it, as if you had a sore and putrid ulcer lurking in your mouth, too tender for such coarse food, and which it would not be at all fitting to injure, by scratching or rubbing against it with vulgar food.

114. Beet.] Beta—some sort of hard, coarse, and unsavoury herb. AINSW. Put here, by meton. for any kind of ordinary harsh food.

If you found this to be the case, you may be certain that you have a luxurious appetite.

115. When white fear, &c.] You said that you had no cold in the extremes of your feet and hands—but how is it with you when you shudder with fear?—The Stoics were great advocates for apathy, or freedom from all passions, fear among the rest.

Whits

- “ Nothing is hot here : and touch the extremes of my feet “ and hands,
 “ They are not cold.”—“ If haply money be seen, or “ Does your heart leap aright ?—there is placed in a cold “ dish

 “ An hard cabbage, and flour shaken thro’ the sieve of the “ people :
 “ Let us try your jaws : a putrid ulcer lies hid in your ten“ der mouth,
 “ Which it would be hardly becoming to scratch with a “ plebeian beet.
 “ You are cold, when white fear has rouz’d the bristles
 “ on your limbs : 115
 “ Now, with a torch put under, your blood grows hot, and “ with anger

White fear, so called from the paleness of countenance that attends it.

115. Rouz’d the bristles.] Arista signifies an ear of corn, or the beard of corn. Sometimes, by catachresis, an hair or bristle, which are often said to stand an end when people are in a fright.

116. Now with a torch, &c.] He now charges him with the disease of violent anger, the blood set on fire, as if a burning torch were applied, and eyes sparkling and flashing fire as it were.—In this situation, says he, you say and do things, that even Orestes himself, mad as he was, would swear were the words and actions of a person out of his senses. So that, though you may think you are well, because you find no feverish heat in your body, yet you are troubled with a fever of the mind every time you are angry. Therefore in this, as well as with regard to the diseases of covetousness, lust, luxury, and fear, which are all within you, you as much stand in need of a physician for your mind, as the poor wretch whom I have been speaking of, stood in need of a physician for his body ; nor did he act more oppositely to the dictates of sound reason, by despising his physician, and rejecting his remedies for his bodily complaints, than you do, by despising the philosophers, and rejecting their precepts, which are the only remedies for the disorders of the mind.

Thus

Scintillant oculi : dicisque, facisque, quod ipse
Non sani esse hominis, non sanus juret Orestes.

Thus the philosopher is supposed to conclude his discourse with his opponent, leaving an useful lesson on the minds of his idle and lazy pupils, who neglected their studies to indulge in sloth and luxury, not considering the fatal distempers of their minds, which, if neglected, must end in their destruction.

117. Orestes] was the son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. He slew his own mother, and Ægisthus, her adulterer, who had murdered his father. He killed Pyrrhus, the son of Achilles, in the temple of Apollo, for marrying Hermione, who had been promised to him by her father Menelaüs. Apollo sent furies to haunt him for the profanation of his temple, and forced him to expiate his crimes at the altar of Diana Taurica. See Juv. Sat. xv. l. 116—19.

See Hor. Sat. iii. Lib. ii. l. 133, & seq. in which satire Horace, with a degree of humour and raillery peculiar to himself, exposes the doctrine of the Stoic philosophers, which was, that all mankind were madmen and fools, except those of their own sect—
this

"Your eyes sparkle, and you do and say, what, Orestes
"himself

"Not in his sound mind, would swear was not the part of "a man in his right senses."

this he, with infinite humour and address, turns upon themselves, and naturally concludes, upon their own premises, that they were greater fools than the rest of the world.

The Stoics were a proud, harsh, severe, and sour sect, in many particulars not very different from the Cynics. The reader may find an instructive account of their principles, doctrines, and practices, as well as an edifying use made of them, in that masterly performance of Dr. Leland, intitled—"The Advantage and Necessity of the Christian Revelation," vol. ii. p. 140—223.

END OF THE THIRD SATIRE.

S A T I R A IV,

A R G U M E N T.

The sting of this Satire is particularly aimed at Nero; but the Poet has been cautious, and therefore has written it under the notion of Socrates admonishing his pupil, young Alcibiades: under this fiction he attacks Nero's unfitness to manage the reins of government, his lust, his cruelty, his drunkenness, his luxury and effeminacy. He also reprehends the flattery of Nero's courtiers, who endeavoured to make Line 1. Do you manage, &c.] Do you take upon yourself the management of public affairs—the government of the state?

— Think.] i. e. Let us suppose—imagine.

— The bearded master.] Socrates, who, like other philosophers, wore a beard, as a mark of wisdom and gravity—let us suppose him thus to discourse to his pupil Alcibiades.

2. Diræ potion, &c.] Socrates was put to death at Athens, on the accusation of Anitus and Melitus. He was condemned to drink the juice of hemlock. See Juv. Sat. xiii. l. 185—6, note.

3. Upon what relying?] What are your qualifications for this, that you rely upon as sufficient for so arduous an undertaking?—ὅτι πιστεύω, says Socrates to Alcibiades.

— O pupil, &c.] The father of young Alcibiades left him under the care and guardianship of Pericles, who was a wise and great statesman, and who administered the affairs of Athens for forty years. Alcibiades was prone to luxury and other vices, but giving himself to be instructed by Socrates, he was somewhat reclaimed. See AINSW. Alcibiades.

his vices pass for virtues. It may be supposed, that our Poet might mean to represent Seneca, Nero's tutor, under the character of Socrates; the tutor of young Alcibiades; and Nero, Seneca's pupil, under the character of Alcibiades. Persius has, in this Satire, almost transcribed Plato's first Alcibiades. See Spectator, N^o 207.

DO you manage the bus'ness of the people? (think the bearded master

To say these things, whom the dire potion of hemlock took off)

Upon what relying? tell this, O pupil of great Pericles.

To be sure, genius, and quick foresight of things,

Come before hairs: you know well what is to be spoken, and what kept in silence. 5

Therefore when the lower sort of people grow warm with stirr'd bile,

4. To be sure.] Scilicet is here ironical, and is put to introduce the following lines, which are all, to l. 13, ironical, and lash Nero under the person of young Alcibiades.

— Genius.] Ingenium—capacity, judgment.

— Quick foresight, &c.] Prudentia—a natural quickness and foresight of things, and an habitual acting accordingly.

5. Before hairs.] i. e. The hairs of the beard.—According to Suet, Nero began to reign before his seventeenth year.

— You know well, &c.] This is a most important qualification in the chief governor of a state, to know when to speak, and when to be silent—what to impart to the people, and what conceal from them—what to take public notice of, and what to pass over in silence: therefore when—

6. The lower sort of people.] Plebecula (dim. from plebs)
the

Fert animus calidæ fecisse silentia turbæ, Majestate manûs. Quid deinde loquere?—' Quirites,
 ' Hoc, puto, non justum est; illud malè; rectius istud.'

the mob, as we say; who, in all states, are, at times, apt to be troublesome if displeased.

6. With stirr'd bile.] Wax warm with anger, their choler stirred, put into commotion—

7. Your mind carries you.] Your mind is so persuaded of your dignity and authority, that it carries you into a notion, that you have but to wave your hand, and the people, though in ever so great a ferment, would be instantly appeased.

— To have made silence, &c.] The thought has but to come into your mind, and the thing seems to have been already done. See Æn. i. 152—57.

8. What then, &c.] q. d. Now let us suppose you to have succeeded, and to have made silence, fecisse silentia—what would be your speech to them, in order to their dispersion?

— "Romans."] Quirites.—The poet supposes him to address the mob by the antient and honourable title of Quirites, in order to gain their attention; and by this, too, he marks out who is meant by Alcibiades; for the Romans, not the Athenians, were called Quirites, from Quirinus, i. e. Romulus, their first founder.

9. I think.] Puto—i. e. in my opinion. He speaks with the diffidence and fear of a young and unexperienced man, instead of the boldness and authority of an old experienced governor.

— Is not just, &c.] He represents Alcibiades (i. e. young Nero) as a miserable and puerile orator, and making a speech consisting of very few words (and those ill calculated to allay the turbulence of an enraged mob) and therefore not fit for the government of such a place as Rome, where seditions and risings of the people were very frequent, and which required all the gravity and force of popular eloquence to appease them.

— That is badly, &c.] He represents Alcibiades, as if he were saying over his lesson about the το δίκαιον, το καλόν, το δίκαιολεγον, to his master Socrates; in order to ridicule the supposed speech of Nero to the people, which is more like a school-boy's repeating his lesson in moral philosophy, than like a manly authoritative oration, calculated for the arduous occasion of appeasing an incensed and seditious mob.

Your mind carries you to have made silence to the warm crowd,

With the majesty of your hand : what then will you speak ?

“ Romans,

“ This, I think, is not just ; that is badly—that more right.”

For you know how to suspend what is just, in the double scale

10

Of the doubtful balance : you discern what is strait when between

Crooked things it comes, or when a rule deceives with a wry foot ;

10. You know how to suspend, &c.] i. e. To weigh and balance between right and wrong ; and to resolve all difficult and doubtful questions concerning them. Metaph. taken from weighing in scales, to ascertain the truth of the weight of any thing.

11. The doubtful balance.] Not knowing which way it will incline, till the experiment be made. So there may be questions which may be very doubtful concerning right, and not to be decided, till very nicely weighed in the mind.

— What is strait, &c.] Metaph. from measuring things by a strait rule, by which is discovered every deviation and inclination from it. This was applied to morals ; what was right was called rectum—what was not right, curvum. So Sat. iii. 52.

Hand tibi inexpertum curvos deprendere mores.

11—12. When between crooked things, &c.] Virtue may sometimes be found, so situated between two vices, as to make the decision of what is right very difficult ; its extremes may seem to border on vice, either on one side or the other.

For instance, when Junius Brutus put his two sons to death, for siding with Tarquin after his expulsion from Rome, this action of Brutus, however virtuous it might be, certainly bordered on cruelty and want of natural affection on one hand, and want of justice and public spirit on the other. See Juv. Sat. viii. l. 261, note.

12. When a rule deceives, &c.] Metaph. from legs which bend inward ; bandy legs, which are mishapen and uneven. You also know, when on account of some necessary exceptions, the rule itself would be uneven and wrong, and would deceive, if observed according to the letter of it.

For instance, it is a rule of justice to return a deposit, when demanded by the owner.—A man, in his right mind, leaves his sword

Et potis es nigrum vitio præfigere theta.

Quin tu, igitur, summa nequicquam pelle decorus,

Ante diem blando caudam jactare popello

Definis, Anticyras melior sorbere meracas?

sword in his friend's hands—afterwards he runs mad, and, with an apparent intent of doing mischief, comes and demands his sword:—the law, in the letter of it, says, “return it;” but this, in such a case, would be a distortion of right, which, if obeyed, would deceive him that complied with it into a wrong action.

13. To fix the black theta.] You are perfectly skilled in the proper distribution of punishments. The letter Θ was put to the names of those who were capitally condemned among the Greeks, it being the first letter of the word Θάνατος, death.

q. d. You perfectly understand criminal as well as civil justice.

In all these four last lines Persius is to be understood directly contrary to what he says, and to speak ironically of Nero's abilities for the distribution of civil and criminal justice. In short, he means that Nero had not any sort of knowledge or experience which could fit him for the government on which he was entered.

14. But, &c.] The poet having, in the four preceding lines, represented Socrates as insinuating, by a severe irony, that his pupil was destitute of all the requisites which form a chief magistrate (which we are to understand as applied by Persius to young Nero) now represents him as throwing off the disguise of irony, and, in plain terms, arraigning his affecting the government, young and inexperienced as he was, and, to that end, his exhibiting his handsome person, clad in a triumphal robe, in order to captivate the minds of the silly rabble—see Tacit. Ann. Lib. xiii. and Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. xiv. p. 356.—when he, instead of governing others, stood in need of that wisdom which could enable him to govern himself.

—Therefore.] As you are destitute of the preceding qualifications of a chief magistrate.—(See l. 10—14.)

—In vain beautiful, &c.] Alcibiades was a beautiful youth—so, all agree, Nero was—but, alas! how vain and empty was this outward embellishment of a fine person, if his mind were replete with ignorance and vice, so that he was utterly unfit for the high station to which he aspired!

15. Before the day.] Before the time comes, when a maturer age, and an acquired knowledge in the affairs of government, shall have qualified you properly.—Nero, though not fourteen years old, after his adoption by the emperor Claudius in preference to his own son Britannicus, was presented with the manly robe, which qualified him for honours and employments. At the same

And you are able to fix the black theta to vice.

But do you therefore (in vain beautiful in your outward skin)

same time, the senate decreed, that, in his twentieth year, he should discharge the consulship, and, in the mean time, as consul designed, be invested with proconsular authority out of Rome, and be styled prince of the Roman youth.

15. Boast your tail.] Metaph. alluding to the peacock's tail, which, when expanded, is very beautiful, and highly admired, by children particularly; (comp. Juv. Sat. vii. 32, note).—So young Nero, in order to draw the eyes and affections of the common people upon him, appeared at the Circensian games in a triumphal robe, the mark and ornament of the imperial state. Ant. Hist. ubi supra.

—The fawning rabble.] Blando—flattering, fawning, easily captivated with outward shew, and as easily prevailed on to make court to it. Popellus, dim. of populus—small, silly, or poor people—the rabble or mob. ANSW.

16. Leave off.] Definis.—q. d. Do you desist from engaging the admiration and flatteries of the people by your fine outward appearance, as though you aspired at governing them—

—More fit.] Melior—i. e. aptior—i. e. when you are fitter to be drinking hellebore to purge out your madness of vice and folly?

—The pure Anticyræ.] Anticyræ meracæ—whole isles of pure hellebore. ANSW. The Anticyræ were two islands in the Ægean Sea, famous for producing large quantities of hellebore, much in repute for purging the head, not only in madness, but to clear it, and quicken the apprehension. Anticyræ stands here for the hellebore which grew there. Meton. See Sat. i. l. 51, note; and Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 83.

All this is, in substance, what Plato represents Socrates saying to Alcibiades; but Persius is to be understood as applying it to Nero, who, having taken the reins of government, without being qualified for the management of them, flattered, and paid court to the senate and people, in order to gain their favour; when all he did, that appeared right, did not proceed from inward virtue and real knowledge, but from counterfeiting and dissembling both.—Leave off this, says Persius, till being properly instructed and informed in the principles of real wisdom and virtue, you may be that really which now you only pretend—in the mean time, as you are at present, you are more fit

Quæ tibi summa boni est?—'uncta vixisse patellâ

Dum ne deterius sapiat pannucia Baucis, Cum benè discincto contaverit ocyma vernæ.

to be put under a regimen of hellebore than for any thing else.
As a proof of this, let me ask you—

17. Your sum of good.] Your summum bonum, or chief good?
If you answer truly, you must own it to be—— To have always lived, &c.] To fare sumptuously, and to live in all the delicacies of gluttony.

18. Skin taken care of, &c.] They used to anoint their bodies, and then bask in the sun, to make their skin imbibe the oil, that it might be smooth and delicate. See Mart. Epigr. Lib. x.
Epigr. xii.

Here Persius attacks the luxury and effeminacy of Nero, who had not yet thrown off the mask; but whatever vices and debaucheries he might practise privately, to the public he still continued to personate a character of some remaining virtues.

— Continual sun.] Hypallage—for continually in the sun.
See Juv. Sat. xi. l. 203.

19. Stay.] Stop a little—there's an old woman crying her herbs—ask her what she thinks the chief good, and you'll hear from her as wise an answer as you have given me, says the poet, as in the person of Socrates to Alcibiades.

— Go now, &c.] i. e. Go now where you please, if such be your ideas of the chief good, and boast that you are nobly born, the son of the noble Dinomache, that great and illustrious woman—but how will this fit you for government, while your ideas are so ignoble and base? Alcibiades was the son of a noble woman of that name—Nero of Agrippa.

20. Puff up.] Suffla—"be proud of this—puff yourself up "with this conceit—but, alas! of what avail is this, when the "first wrinkled old woman you meet is as well informed, touching the chief and highest good of man, as you are."

21. Baucis.] The name of an old woman. See Ov. Met.
Lib. viii. Fab. viii. ix.—here put for any of that character.
Pannuceus signifies ragged, or clothed in rags; also wrinkled.

22. Cried herbs, &c.] Ocimum is an herb called basil, but put here in the plural number for all sorts of herbs, which, as well as this, were cried and sold by old women about the streets of Rome.

Discinctus

- “What is your sum of good?”—“To have always lived “with a delicious
 “Dish, and the skin taken care of in the continual “fun.”—
 “Stay: this old woman would hardly answer otherwise.—
 “Go now—
 “I am of Dinomache:”—“puff up:”—“I am hand“some.”—“be it so: 20
 “Since ragged Baucis is not less wise than you,
 “When she has well cried herbs to a slovenly slave.”

Discinctus signifies, lit. ungirt, the clothes hanging loose—hence slovenly—and perhaps it may therefore be a proper epithet for one of the common slaves, who might be usually slovenly in their appearance; one of these hearing the woman cry her herbs, goes out into the street and buys some.

Some are for making cantaverit ocyma a figurative expression for the old woman's quarrelling, and abusing the slave; but I see no reason for departing from the above literal explication, which, to me, seems to contain a very natural description of an old herb-woman, crying her herbs in a sort of singing or chant, such as is heard every day in London, and one of the lower servants in the family hearing her, and going into the street to her to buy some.

The poet's meaning, here, is to mortify Nero's vanity, with regard to his person and appearance. “You boast of your youth, birth, and fortune—of your beauty and elegance of appearance—all which may be understood by candidus—

Candidus, & talos a vertice pulcher ad imos.

HOR. Epist. ii. Lib. ii. l. 4.

q. d. “I grant all that you can say on these subjects; but how little are all these, in comparison of the beauty and ornaments of the mind, in which you don't exceed a poor old, ragged, and wrinkled hag, that cries herbs about the street? She is not worse off (deterius) than you, in point of wisdom and knowledge; nay, she may be said to exceed you, since she is endowed with wisdom enough to fulfil, and well to perform, what her station of life requires: she cries her herbs well, and knows how to recommend them to the best advantage to the buyers; but you are destitute of all those qualities which are requisite to perform the duties of that station, in which you are placed as the chief governor of a great people.”

25. You are aſked, &c.] i. e. Suppoſe you are enquired of by ſomebody, and are aſked, "Whether you know the farms on "the eſtate of Veſtidius?"

— "Whoſe?" i. e. Whoſe ſay you?—as if not knowing whom he means to enquire about.

26. "Rich he ploughs, &c."] I mean, ſays he, that rich fellow, that has more arable land than a kite can ſkim over in a day. Oberro ſignifies to wander about in an irregular manner, and well deſcribes the flight of a kite, which does not proceed ſtrait forward, but keeps wheeling about, in an irregular manner, in ſearch of prey. This ſeems to be proverbial for a large and extenſive landed eſtate. See Juv. Sat. ix. l. 55. tot milvos intra tua pascua laſſos.—Cures was a city of the Sabines, or rather the country about it.

27. "Him do you ſay?"] Do you mean that Veſtidius, who has ſo much land at Cures?—ſay you—

"Who, whensoever he fixes a yoke at the beaten cross-ways,

27. Angry gods.] It was a notion among the antient heathen, that the gods were displeased and angry with those with whom they themselves were displeased, even at the time they were born, and that, therefore, through life they were under an adverse fate. See Juv. Sat. i. l. 49—50; and Juv. Sat. x. 129. Dis ille adversis genitus, fatusque sinistro.

— An unlucky genius.] See Sat. ii. l. 3, note.

— "Of heaven and earth the scorn,
"With angry gods, and adverse genius born."

BREWSTER.

Sinister, as has been already observed (see Juv. xiv. 1, note) means unfortunate, unlucky, untoward; also unfavourable.

28. Fixes a yoke, &c.] This alludes to a festival time, when, after ploughing and sowing were over, the husbandmen hung up the yokes of their oxen on stakes, or posts, in some public highway, most frequented; therefore they chose the compita, or places where four ways met, where the country people came together to keep their wakes, and to perform their sacrifices to the Lares, or rural gods; hence called Compitalitii. This was a season of great festivity (something like harvest-home among us) when the farmers ate and drank with great jollity.

29. Fearing to scrape, &c.] The antients, when they put wine into vessels, stopped up the mouth with clay or pitch daubed over it. When it was brought out for use, the mouth was unstopped, by scraping off the covering, that the wine might be poured out. Hor. Lib. i. Ode xx. l. 2—3.

This poor niggardly wretch, even at a time of festivity, grudged to open a vessel; and, if he did it, seemed as if it threatened his ruin. O, says he, with a groan, may this end well! hoc bene fit—a sort of solemn deprecation, frequently used by the Romans on their undertaking something very weighty and important.

30—1. A coated onion.] Tunicatum—because an onion consists of several coats.

31. Mess of pottage.] Farratam signifies made of corn: ollam, a pot in which the pottage (which was made of corn, meal, or flour, with water and herbs) was boiled; here, by metonymy, put for its contents—i. e. the pottage. Comp. Juv. Sat. xiv. 171, note.

— Servants applauding.] Even this mean fare, being more than they usually had on other days, therefore they rejoiced at the sight of it, and applauded their master's liberality. Comp. Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 126—134.

32. Sups up the motherly dregs, &c.] Acetum—wine turned sour.

—Acre

Potet acetum. HOR. Sat. iii. Lib. ii. l. 116—17.

When wine ferments and turns sour, there is a scum or mouldiness on the top, which bears the appearance of white rags—hence motherly wine was called pannosus. Every word in this line has an emphasis, to describe the covetous miserable wretch who is the subject of it. Sorbet, he sups or drinks up, leaves none—wine turned sour, motherly, the dregs of it, dying, losing even the little spirit it had. So we speak of vapid, flat liquors, that have lost all their spirit—we say they are dead, as dead small-beer, &c. All this he is supposed to do, even at a time of feasting, rather than afford himself good liquor.

33. You can loiter, &c.] Comp. l. 18. If you indulge in laziness, luxury, and effeminacy.—The poet here cautions the re-

lator of the faults of Vestidius, and lets him know that some other may make as free with his.

34. One unknown.] Don't think that your faults will be concealed any more than you conceal the faults of other people. Somebody or other, whom perhaps you little think of, and whom you know not,

34. May touch, &c.] May remind you of your vices by a gentle jog of the elbow, and say, "Pray look at home."

34—5. Sharply spit down, &c.] Acre, a Grecism; for acriter, sharply, with acrimony.—Despuo, literally, is to spit down or upon: hence to spit out in abhorrence, to express contempt, abhorrence, detestation: "Therefore don't flatter yourself that "you will escape the censure of others, any more than Vestidius,
"or others, escape yours—your manners are such, as to call for
"the utmost abhorrence, and the sharpest censure. Metaph. from those who spit, on smelling or tasting any thing that is filthy.

From this place to l. 42. the thoughts and expressions are by no means proper for literal translation—I have therefore paraphrased them, and shall only observe, that their tendency is indirectly to charge the young emperor Nero with certain lewd and unnatural actions, which, however hitherto he might keep from the public eye, were yet practised by him in secret.

42. We last.] Or we strike others, in censuring and publishing their faults.

Vivitur hoc pacto: sic novimus. Ilia subter,
 Cæcum vulnus habes; sed lato balteus auro
 Prætegit: ut mavis, da verba, & decipe nervos, 45
 Si potes. 'Egregium cum me vicinia dicat,
 Non credam?' viso si palles, improbe, nummo;
 Si facis, in penem quicquid tibi venit amarum;
 Si puteal multa cautus vibice flagellas;
 Nequicquam populo bibulas donaveris aures. 50

42. We expose our legs to arrows.] Metaph. from the gladiators, who, while they strike at the adversary, expose their own persons to be wounded where most easily vulnerable. So, while we lash or strike others with our tongues, we expose ourselves to be lashed by them in our turn, and to receive the arrows of defamation and defamation into whatever part of our character is most vulnerable. The gladiators could guard the body, but the legs and lower parts were much exposed to the stroke of the adversary.

43. Thus we live.] Vivitur, imperf.—q. d. This is the manner of common life, censuring and being censured. See Sat. iii. l. 20, luditur, note.

— Thus we know.] Thus we become acquainted with men's characters, by hearing their faults published by their revilers.

44. A blind wound.] i. e. You practise wickedness, which is concealed from the eyes of the world, but yet wounds your conscience; guilt lurks within, and wounds you inwardly.

44—5. A belt—covers it—] Metaph. from the practice of the gladiators, who, when they received a wound, covered it with the broad belt which they wore, in order to keep it from the eyes of the spectators. Thus Nero, by the greatness of his power, and by the splendor of his appearance and situation (here meant by the figure of a broad belt of gold) covered his iniquities from the animadversion of the laws, and from the observation of the people.

45: Cheat—and deceive, &c.] Impose upon others, and deceive your own feelings, as much as you please, that is, if you find it possible so to do.

— Cheat.] Da verba. See before, note, Sat. iii. l. 19.

— Nerves.] Nervos.—The nerves are the organs of sensation.

46. If you can.] i. e. But this you cannot do.

— When the neighbourhood says, &c.] These are the words of Alcibiades (i. e. Nero)—in answer to what has been said.

- " Thus we live—thus we know—under your bowels
 " You have a blind wound : but a belt with broad gold
 " Covers it: as you please, cheat—and deceive your " nerves, 45
 " If you can."—"When the neighbourhood says I am ex" cellent,
 " Shall I not believe it?"—"If money being seen, O
 " wicked man, you are pale—
 " If you do whatever your lust prompts you to—
 " If, cautious, you scourge the puteal with many a stripe,
 " In vain shall you give your soaking ears to the rabble. 50

" All the world," says he, " speak of my excellence as a " man, and as a prince, and would you not have me believe
 " what they say?"

47. If money, &c.] Socrates (i. e. Persius) answers—In" stead of taking the idea of your own character from the flat-
 " teries of the populace, examine yourself; and if you find that " you grow pale, as it were, at the very sight of money, from an " envious and covetous desire after it—if you give the reins to " your abominable lusts—if you are committing robberies, mur" ders, and other acts of cruelty in the streets, cautious to secure
 " yourself by taking guards with you—in vain," &c.—Pu-
 " teal (from puteus, a well). When lightning fell in any place, the old Romans covered the place over, like a public well; and such a place they properly called puteal. There was one in the Roman forum, and near it was the tribunal of the prætor.
 This was the scene of many of Nero's nightly frolicks, who was a kind of Mohock in his diversions, and committed numberless enormities, even murders and robberies, disguised in the habit of a slave: but, at last, having been soundly beaten, he grew cautious, and went attended by gladiators. It is to this Persius here alludes. And Nero might well be called the scourge of every place where he transacted such enormities, and be said to leave many marks and wales behind him in those places which were the scenes of his flagitious practices.

50. In vain, &c.] It will be of very little use to you to let your ears imbibe the applause and flattery of the mob (see before, l. 15), which ears of yours are as prone to this as a sponge to soak in water.

If your own conscience accuses you of what I have above spoken of, the applauses, which you know yourself to be utterly undeserving of, can give you but little comfort—nor can they make you better than you are.

Respue quod non es : tollat sua munera cerdo :

Tecum habita, & nôris quam sit tibi curta supellex.

51. Reject what you are not.] Persius concludes this Satire with two lines of salutary advice to Nero—

Reject, put away from you, what does not belong to you—lay aside the feigned character under which you appear.

— Let the cobbler, &c.] Cerdo—put here for the lower people in general. See Juv. Sat. iv. l. 153.—q. d. “ Give them back the presents which they make you of adulation and applause ; let them carry them away, and keep them to themselves, or bestow them elsewhere—have nothing to do with them.”

52. Dwell with yourself.] i. e. Retire into thyself ; let thine own breast be the abode of thy constant thoughts.

52. Teor

SAT. IV. PERSIUS'S SATIRES. 395

“ Reject what you are not—Let the cobbler take away his “ gifts:

“ Dwell with yourself, and you will know how short your “ household stuff is.”

52. Your household stuff, &c.] You will then find out how poorly furnished you are within, how short your abilities, and how little fitted for the arduous task of government, or indeed for the purposes of civil society.

Metaph. from the furniture of an house—here applied to those qualities of the mind which are necessary to furnish and adorn it, for the purposes of civil and social life.

END OF THE FOURTH SATIRE.

SATIRA

S A T I R A V.

A R G U M E N T.

This Satire is justly esteemed the best of the six.—It consists of three parts: in the first of which the Poet highly praises Annæus Cornutus, who had been his preceptor, and recommends other young men to his care.—In the second part, he blames the idleness and sloth of young men, and exhorts them to follow after the liberty and enfranchisement of the mind.—

PERSIUS. VATIBUS hic mos est, centum sibi poscere

Centum ora, & linguas optare in carmina centum:

Thirdly, he shews wherein true liberty consists, and asserts that doctrine of the Stoics, that "a wise man only is free;" and that a slavery to vice is the most miserable of all.

The Satire begins in the form of a dialogue between Persius and Cornutus.

PERSIUS. THIS is a custom with poets, to ask for themselves an hundred voices,
And to wish for an hundred mouths, and an hundred tongues for their verses :

Whether a fable be proposed to be bawled out by the sad tragedian ;

Or the wounds of a Parthian drawing the sword from his groin.

CORNUTUS. Wherefore these things ? or how great pieces of robust verse their style and language might be amplified and extended, adequately to the greatness and variety of their subjects.

3. Whether a fable.] The subject or story on which they write is called the fable.

— Bawled out, &c.] i. e. Whether they write tragedy, to be acted on the stage. Comp. Juv. Sat. vi. l. 635.

Grande Sophocleo carmen bacchamur hiatu.

4. Or the wounds of a Parthian, &c.] Or write an epic poem on the wars of the Romans with the Parthians, in which the latter were overcome.

Aut labentis equo describere vulnere Parthi.

HOR. Sat. i. Lib. ii. l. 15.

5. CORNUTUS. Wherefore these things.] Quorsum—to what end,

Ingeris, ut par sit centeno gutture niti?
 Grande locuturi, nebulas Helicone legunto:
 Si quibus aut Prognēs, aut si quibus olla Thyestæ Fervebit, sæpe infuso cœnanda Glyconi.
 Tu neque anhelanti, coquitur dum massa camino,
 Folle premis ventos: nec, clauso murmure raucus,
 Nescio quid tecum grave cornicaris ineptè:
 Nec scloppo tumidas intendis rumpere buccas.
 Verba togæ sequeris, junctura callidus acri, end, purpose, or intent, do you mention these things, as if you were wishing them for yourself?

5. How great pieces, &c.] Metaph. from a person who puts large lumps or pieces of meat into his mouth, big enough to require a number of throats to swallow them.

q. d. What great and huge heroics art thou setting about, which thou canst think equal to such a wish, in order to enable thee to do them justice?

7. Gather clouds in Helicon.] Let them go to Mount Helicon (see ante, the Prologue, l. 1, note) and there gather up the mists which hang over the sacred top, and which teem, no doubt, with poetical rapture.

8. The pot of Progne, &c.] i. e. If any shall have his imagination warmed with the feasts of Progne and Thyestes, so as to write upon them.

Progne was the wife of Tereus, king of Thrace: Tereus fell in love with Philomela, sister to Progne, ravished her, and cut out her tongue. In revenge Progne killed Itys, her own son by Tereus, and served him up at a feast to be eaten by his father.

— Thyestes.] Atreus, king of Mycenæ, banished his brother Thyestes, for defiling his wife Ærope: afterwards, recalling him, invited him to a banquet, ordered the children he had by her to be dressed and set before him on a table.

9. Often to be supped on by foolish Glycon.] He was some wretched tragedian of those times, who acted the parts of Tereus and Thyestes, and, accordingly, represented both of them as eating their children.

10. Thou neither, while the mass, &c.] Metaph. from smiths heating iron in furnaces, where the fire is kept up to a great heat by the blowing with bellows, in order to render the iron ductile, and easily formed into what shape they please.

q. d. You, says Cornutus, are not forging in your brain hard and difficult subjects, and blowing up your imagination, to form them into sublime poems. See Hor. Lib. i. Sat. iv. l. 19—21.

11. Nor hoarse, &c.] Nor do you foolishly prate, like the hoarse

Dost thou thrust in, that it should be meet to strive with an hundred throats ?

Let those who are about to speak something great, gather clouds in Helicon,

If to any either the pot of Progne, or if to any that of Thyestes

Shall be hot, often to be supped on by foolish Glycon.

Thou neither, while the mass is heated in the furnace, to Prestest the wind with breathing bellows ; nor hoarse, with close murmur,

Foolishly croakest I know not what weighty matter with thyself :

Nor intendest to break thy tumid cheeks with a puff.

You follow the words of the gown, cunning in sharp composition,

hoarse croaking of a crow, with an inward kind of murmur to yourself, as if you were muttering something you think very grand and noble. See Sat. iii. l. 81, and note.

13. Tumid cheeks, &c.] Scloppus is a sound made with puffing the cheeks, and then forcing the air out suddenly by striking them together with the hands.

q. d. Nor do you, when you repeat your verses, appear as if you were making a noise like that of cheeks puffed up almost to bursting, and then suddenly stricken together, like the swelling and bombast method of elocution used by the fustian poets of our day.

Cornutus praises Persius in a threefold view. 1. As not heating his imagination with high and difficult subjects. 2. As not affecting to be meditating and murmuring within himself, as if he would be thought to be producing some great performance.
3. As in the repetition of his verses avoiding all bombastic utterance.

14. Words of the gown.] Toga is often used to signify peace—Cedant arma togæ. CIC.—for, in time of peace, the Romans wore only the toga, or gown ; in time of war, the toga was thrown aside for the sagum, or soldier's cloak.

Cornutus here means to say, that Persius did not write of wars and bloodshed, but confined himself to subjects of common life, such as passed daily among the people, and made use of plain words suited to his matter.

— Cunning in sharp composition.] Acute and ingenious in a neat

Ore teres modico: pallentes radere mores

15

Doctus, & ingenuo culpam defigere ludo.

Hinc trahe quæ dicas: mensasque relinque Mycenis

Cum capite & pedibus; plebeiaque prandia nôris.

PERS. Non equidem hoc studeo, bullatis ut mihi nugis

Pagina turgescat, dare pondus idonea fumo.

20

Secreti loquimur: tibi nunc, hortante camœnâ,

a neat composition of verse. Metaph. from those who work in marble, who so exactly join their pieces together, and polish them so neatly, that the joints can't be perceived. See Sat. i. l. 64, note.

15. Smooth with moderate language.] Teres signifies smooth, even; also accurate, exact. Modico ore—with a moderate, modest language, or style of writing, neither rising above, nor sinking below the subject, nor flying out into that extravagance of expression, so much then in vogue. See Sat. i. l. 98—102.

—— To lash.] Radere, lit. signifies to scratch, or scrape up, or rub against; here, by meton. to lash or chastize. When a satirist does this effectually, the guilty turn pale at his reproof: for paleness is the effect of fear; and fear, of conscious guilt. Hence, Hor. Epist. i. Lib. i. l. 60—1.

—— Hic murus abeneus esto

Nil conscire sibi, nullâ pallefcere culpâ.

—— Vicious manners.] Pallentes mores—lit. manners turning pale—the effect for the cause. Meton. See the last note.

16. Mark a crime with ingenuous sport.] Defigere—metaph. from fixing a dagger, or critical mark, against any word or sentence, either to be corrected as faulty, or struck out as superfluous. This the Greeks called κρίνειν, εἰζειν, compungere, confodere, or the like.

So Persius is said to stigmatize, or mark down, a crime with ingenuous sport—i. e. with well-bred raillery, in order to its correction; to fix a mark against it.

Qu.—If this be not going rather too far with regard to Persius, who seems not much inclined to politeness, with respect to those whom he satirizes, but rather treats them with severity and roughness?

Horace indeed deserved such an account to be given of him. Comp. Sat. i. l. 116—18.

John Hanvil, a monk of St. Alban's, about the year 1190, thus writes on the different merits of Horace and Persius—

Persius in pelago Flacci decurrit, & audet
Mendicasse stylum Satiræ, serraque cruentus
Rodit, & ignorat polientem pectora linam.

17. Hence

Smooth with moderate language, to lash vicious manners 15
 Skilled, and to mark a crime with ingenuous sport.

Hence draw what you may say: and leave the tables at Mycenæ,

With the head and feet, and know plebeian dinners.

PERS. I do not indeed desire this, that with empty trifles my

Page should swell, fit to give weight to smoke. 20

Secret we speak: to you now, the Muse exhorting,

17. Hence draw, &c.] From hence, i. e. from the vices of mankind, select the subjects of your writings.

— Leave the tables, &c.] Leave the tragical banquet of Thyestes at Mycenæ for others to write on—trouble not yourself about such subjects.

18. With the head and feet.] Atreus reserved the heads, feet, and hands of the children; which after supper he shewed to his brother Thyestes, that he might know whose flesh he had been feasting upon.

— Know plebeian dinners.] Acquaint yourself only with the enormities that pass in common life—nōris—quasi, fac noscas—let these be your food for satire.

19. I do not desire this.] Persius here answers his preceptor Cornutus, and tells him, that he does not want an hundred tongues and voices, in order to be writing vain and highflown poems; but that he might duly express Cornutus's worth, and his sense of it.

Studeo signifies literally to study, but also to apply the mind to, to care for a thing, to mind, to desire it.

— Empty trifles.] Bullatis (from bulla, a bubble of water) nugis—by met. swelling lines, lofty words, without sense, empty expressions. AINSW.

20. Fit to give weight to smoke.] i. e. Fit for nothing else but to give an air of consequence and importance to trifles, which, in reality, have no more substance in them than smoke.—Nugis ad-dere pondus. Hor. Epist. Lib. i. Epist. xix. l. 42.

21. Secret we speak.] You and I, Cornutus, are not now speaking to the multitude, but to each other in private, and therefore I will disclose the sentiments of my heart.

— The Muse exhorting.] My Muse prompting and leading me to an ample disclosure of my thoughts, and to reveal how great a share you have in my affections—to do this, is a pleasure to myself.

Excutienda damus præcordia : quantaque nostræ

Pars tua sit, Cornute, animæ, tibi (dulcis amice)

Ostendisse juvat. Pulsa, dignoscere cautus

Quid solidum crepet, & pictæ tectoria linguæ.

His ego centenas ausim deposcere voces :

Ut quantum mihi te sinuoso in pectore fixi,

Voce traham pura : totumque hoc verba resignent,

Quod latet arcana non enarrabile fibrâ.

Cum primum pavidos custos mihi purpura cessit,

30

Bullaque succinctis Laribus donata pendit ;

Cum blandi comites ; totaque impunè Suburrâ

25. What sounds solid.] Try and examine me, knock at my breast ; if you wish to know whether I am sincere or not, hear how that sounds.—Metaphor, from striking earthen vessels with the knuckle, in order to try, by the sound, whether they were solid or cracked. See Sat. iii. l. 21, 22, and note.

— The coverings, &c.] Tectorium—the plaster, parget, or rough-cast of a wall, which conceals it : hence dissimulation, flattery, which cover the real sentiments of the heart. See Matt. xxiii. 27.

— Painted tongue.] Picta linguæ—i. e. a tongue adorned and garnished with dissimulation—varnished over with falsehood.

26. For these things.] i. e. Properly to disclose my friendship and gratitude to you, by drawing forth and uttering what I feel for you, whom I have fixed within the most intimate recesses of my breast. See ANSW. Sinuosus, N° 4. This sense of the word seems metaphorical, and to be taken from what hath many turnings and windings, and so difficult to find or trace out.

28. With pure voice.] With the utmost sincerity, pure from all guile.

— Words may unseal.] Resigno is to open what is sealed, to unseal : hence, met. to discover and declare.

29. Not to be told.] Not fully to be expressed.

— In my secret inwards.] In the secret recesses of my heart and mind. Comp. Sat. i. l. 47.

30. The guardian purple.] The habit worn by younger noblemen was edged about with a border of purple ; an ornament which had the repute of being sacred, and was therefore assigned to children as a sort of preservative. Hence Persius calls it custos purpura.

— Fearful.] Which protected me when a child, and when I was under the fear and awe of a severe master. Pavidum tyronem. Juv. xvi. l. 3.

30. Yielded.

I give my heart to be searched, and how great a part
Of my soul, Cornutus, is yours, to you, my gentle friend,
It pleases me to have shewn : knock, careful to discern What may sound solid, and the coverings of a painted tongue. 25

For these things I would dare to require an hundred voices,
That, how much I have fixed you in my inmost breast,
I may draw forth with pure voice : and all this, words may unfeal,

Which lies hid, not to be told, in my secret inwards.

When first to fearful me the guardian purple yielded, 30
And the bulla presented to the girt Lares hung up :
When kind companions, and, with impunity, in the whole Suburra

30. Yielded.] Resigned its charge, and gave place to the toga virilis, or manly gown. About the age of sixteen or seventeen they laid aside the prætexta, and put on the toga virilis, and were ranked with men.

31. And the bulla.] This was another ornament worn by children : it was worn hanging from the neck, or about the breast, and was made in the shape of an heart, and hollow within. This they left off with the prætexta, and consecrated to the household gods, and hung up in honour to them. See Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. xi. p. 289, note S.

— The girt Lares.] The images of the Lares, or household gods, were described in a sort of military habit, which hung on the left shoulder, with a lappet fetched under the other arm, brought over the breast, and tied in a knot. The idea of this dress was first taken from the Gabini, and called Cinctus Gabinus. See ANSW. Gabinus ; and Virg. Æn. vii. 612, and Servius's note there.

32. Kind companions.] A set of young fellows, who were my companions, and ready to join in any scheme of debauchery with me. I cannot think that comites, here, is to be understood of " his school-masters, or pedagogues, who now no longer treated " him with severity." He was now a man, and had done with these.—Of such a one Horace says—

Imberbis juvenis, tandem custode remoto, &c.

De Art. Poet. l. 161—65.

And see Kennett, Antiq. p. 311, edit. 5. 1713.

35

32. In the whole Suburra.] This was a famous and populous street in Rome, where were numbers of brothels, the harlots from which walked out by night, to the great mischief of young men. Here, says Persius, I could ramble as I pleased, and fix my eyes where I pleased, and had nobody to call me to account, or punish me for it. Juv. Sat. iii. l. 5.

33. The white shield, &c.] When the young men put on the toga virilis, they were presented with a white shield ; that is to say, a shield with no engraving, device, or writing upon it, but quite blank. This shield was a token that they were now grown up, and fit for war. Its being blank, signified their not having yet attained any warlike action worthy to be described, or recorded, upon it by a device.

So Virg. Æn. ix. l. 548.

Ense levis nudo, parmæque inglorius albâ.

When this shield was a passport to me, says Persius, to go where I pleased, without being molested by my old masters.

34. When the journey is doubtful.] When the mind of a young man is doubting what road of life to take, like a traveller who comes to where two ways meet, and can hardly determine which to pursue.

— And error.] So apt to beset young minds, and so easily to mislead them.

— Ignorant of life.] Of the best purposes and ends of life, and wholly unknowing and ignorant of the world.

35. Parts asunder trembling minds.] Divides the young and inexperienced minds of young men, fearing and trembling between the choice of good and evil, now on this side, now on that.

— Branching cross-ways.] Compitum is a place where two or more ways meet. — The poet here alludes to the Pythagorean letter Y. See Sat. iii. l. 56, note.

36. I put myself under you.] Under your care and instruction.

36—7. You undertake, &c.] You admitted me under your discipline, in order to season my mind with the moral philosophy

Now the white shield permitted me to have thrown about ceive,

The applied rule rectifies my depraved morals,
And my mind is pressed by reason, and labours to be overcome,

phy of the Stoics : you not only received me as a pupil, but took me to your bosom with the affection of a parent.

Antisthenes, the master of Diogenes, was a disciple of Socrates ; Diogenes taught Crates the Theban, who taught Zeno the founder of the Stoic school : so that the Stoic dogmas might be said to be derived, originally, from Socrates, as from the fountain-head.

37. Dextrous to deceive, &c.] The application of your doctrine to my morals, which were depraved, and warped from the strait rule of right, first discovered this to me, and then corrected it ; but this you did with so much skill and address, that I grew almost insensibly reformed : so gradually were the severities of your discipline discovered to me, that I was happily cheated, as it were, into reformation ; whereas, had you at first acquainted me with the whole at once, I probably had rejected it, not only as displeasing, but as unattainable by one who thought as I then did.

38. Applied rule.] Metaph. from mechanics, who, by a rule applied to the side of any thing, discover its being warped from a strait line, and set it right.

— Rectifies.] Lit. extends. Metaph. from straitening a twisted or entangled cord, by extending or stretching it out.
Intortos, lit. twisted, entangled.

39. My mind is pressed by reason, &c.] My mind and all its faculties were so overpowered by the conviction of reason, that it strove to coincide with what I heard from you, and to be conquered by your wisdom.

— Labours, &c.] The word laborat denotes the difficulties which lie in the way of young minds to yield to instruction, and to subdue and correct their vicious habits and inclinations.

40. And draws, &c.] Metaph. from an artist who draws forth, or forms, figures with his fingers, out of wax or clay.—Ducere is a word peculiar to the making statues in marble also.

—Vivos ducent de marmore vultus. Æn. vi. 848.

—An artificial countenance.] Artificem—hypallage, for artifici pollice. The sense is—My mind, by thee gently and wisely wrought upon, put on that form and appearance which you wished it should. The like thought occurs, Juv. Sat. vii. l. 237.

Exigite ut mores teneros ceu pollice ducat,

41. Consume long suns.] To have passed many long days—soles, for dies. Meton.

—Sæpe ego longos
Cantando puerum memini me condere soles.

VIRG. Ecl. ix. l. 51—2.

42. To pluck the first nights, &c.] Decerpere—metaph. from plucking fruit. The first nights—the first part or beginning of nights; we plucked, i. e. we took away from the hours of feasting.—q. d. Instead of supping at an early hour, and being long at table, we spent the first part of the evening in philosophical converse, thus abridging the time of feasting for the sake of improvement.

—Of the night
Have borrow'd the first hours, feasting with thee
On the choice dainties of philosophy. HOLYDAY.

43. One work and rest, &c.] We, both of us, disposed and divided our hours of study, and our hours of rest and refreshment, in a like manner together.

44. And relax serious things.] Relaxed our minds from study.

And draws, under your thumb, an artificial countenance. 40
 For I remember to consume with you long suns,
 And with you to pluck the first nights from feasts.
 One work and rest we both dispose together,
 And relax serious things with a modest table.

Do not indeed doubt this, that, in a certain agreement, 45
 The days of both consent, and are derived from one star.
 Fate, tenacious of truth, either suspended our times
 With equal Libra; or the hour, framed for the faithful, Divides to the twins the concordant fates of both;

44. A modest table.] With innocent mirth, as we sat at table, and with frugal meals.

45. Do not doubt this, &c.] Beyond a doubt, this strict union of our minds must be derived from an agreement in the time of our nativity, being born both under the same star.

So Hor. Lib. ii. Ode xvii. l. 21—2.

Utrumque nostrum incredibili modo Consentit astrum.

The antients thought that the minds of men were greatly influenced by the planet which presided at their birth; and that those who were born under the same planet, had the same dispositions and inclinations.

47. Fate, tenacious of truth.] Unerring fate, as we say.

— Suspended our times.] Metaph. from hanging things on the beam of a balance, in order to weigh them.

Fate weighed, with equal balance, our times, when Libra had the ascendancy.

48. With equal Libra.] A constellation into which the sun enters about the twentieth of September, described by a pair of scales, the emblem of equity and justice.

50. Break, &c.] Frangere and temperare were used by the astrologers, when the malignant aspect of one star was corrected, and its influence prevented, by the power of some other propitious and benign planet.

Hence that astrological axiom—Quicquid ligat Saturnus, solvit Jupiter.

The planet Saturn was reckoned to have a malign aspect; the planet Jupiter a mild and favourable one, and to counteract the former.

HOR. Ode xvii. Lib. ii. l. 22—24.

51. I know not, &c.] I won't take upon me to be certain what star it was; but that it proceeds from the influence of some friendly star or other, which presided at our natal hour, that we are one in heart and sentiment, I am very clear.

Temperò literally signifies to temper, mix or mingle together.

52. There are a thousand species, &c.] i. e. Different kinds of men, as to their dispositions and pursuits.

—Different use, &c.] Discolor—literally, of a different colour. Their use of what they possess differs as much as one colour from another: some (as it follows in the next lines) from avarice, trade to increase their store; others, through luxury and extravagance, squander it away.

53. Has his will.] Velle, i. e. voluntas. Vivitur, imperf. See Sat. iii. 20, note.

54. The recent sun.] In the East, where the sun first appears.

55. Changes, &c.] Sails to the East Indies, where he barter the produce of Italy for the produce of the East.

55. Wrinkled pepper.] When pepper is gathered, and dried in the sun, the coat or outside shrivels up into wrinkles.

— Pale cumin.] The seed of an herb, which being infused in wine, or other liquor, causes a paleness in those who drink it : it comes from Æthiopia. Probably it stands here for any Oriental aromatics.

Hor. Epist. xix. Lib. i. l. 17—8, speaks of his imitators.

— Quod si

56. Sated.] Satur—that has his belly full—glutted with eating and drinking.

— Swell up.] With fat.

— Moist sleep.] Irriguus signifies wet, moist, watered ; also, that watereth. Here, metaph. from watering plants, by which they increase and grow. So sleep is to those who eat much, and sleep much ; it makes them grow, and increase in bulk.

57. Indulges in the field.] In the sports and exercises of the Campus Martius. Or perhaps field-sports may be understood.
Comp. Hor. Ode i. l. 3—6, and l. 25—8.

— The die consumes.] Is ruined by gaming. Decoquit—metaph. from boiling away liquors over a fire.—So the gamester, by continual play, consumes his substance.

58. For Venus.] i. e. Ruins his health—is in a manner rotten—by continual acts of lewdness and debauchery. Putris means also wanton, lascivious.

58. The stony gout.] So called from its breeding chalk-stones in the joints, when long afflicted with it.

59. Broken his joints.] Destroyed the use of them as much as if they had been broken, and are so to all appearance.

— The branches, &c.] Ramalia—seared or dead boughs cut from a tree, which may be looked upon, from their withered and useless appearance, as very strong emblems of a gouty man's limbs, the joints of which are useless, and the flesh withered away—(see Sat. i. 97.)—so that they appear like the dead branches of an old decayed beech-tree.

60. Gross days.] Crassos—the days which they have spent in gross sensuality, as well as in thick mental darkness and error.

— Gloomy light.] Palustrem—metaph. from the fogs which arise in marshes and fenny places, which obscure the light, and involve those who live in, or near them, in unwholesome mists.—Such is the situation of those, whose way of life is not only attended with ignorance and error, but with injury to their health, and with ruin of their comfort.

61. Late bewailed.] Too late for remedy.

— The life now left, &c.] They not only bemoan themselves, at the recollection of their past mispent life, but the portion of life which now remains, being imbibed by remorse, pain, and disease, becomes a grief and burthen.

62. Grow pale, &c.] Your delight, O Cornutus, is to pass the time, when others sleep, in hard study, which brings a paleness on your countenance. See Sat. i. l. 124; and Sat. iii. l. 85.

63. A cultivator of youths.] Cultor—metaph. from colo, to till or cultivate the ground.

q. d. As the husbandman tills or cultivates the ground, and prepares it to receive seed, and to bring forth fruit—so do you, Cornutus, prepare youthful minds to receive and bring forth wisdom.

— You sow their purged ears.] The metaphor is still carried on; as the husbandman casts the seed into the ground which he has prepared and cleaned, by tillage, from weeds—so do you sow

Has broken his joints, the branches of the old beech, Then, that their gross days have passed away, and the gloomy light, 60

And they have late bewailed, the life now left to them.

But it delights you to grow pale with nightly papers,
For, a cultivator of youths, you sow their purged ears
With Cleanthean corn. Hence seek, ye young and old, sow the doctrines of moral philosophy, which were taught by Cleanthes, the disciple and successor of Zeno, in the ears of your pupils, after having purged away those errors, falsehoods, and prejudices, with which they were at first possessed, by your wise and well-applied instruction. You first teach them to avoid vice and error, and then to embrace and follow truth and virtue.

Virtus est vitium fugere, & sapientia prima Stultitiâ caruisse. HOR. Lib. i. Epist. i. l. 41—2.

64. Hence seek, &c.] Persius here invites both young and old to seek for wisdom from the Stoic philosophy, as taught by his friend and preceptor Cornutus ; that, thereby, they might find some certain and fixed end, to which their views might be directed, and no longer fluctuate in the uncertainty of error.

Certum voto pete finem.
HOR. Epist. Lib. i. Ep. ii. l. 56.

65. Stores, &c.] Viatica, literally, are stores, provisions, things necessary for a journey ; as money, victuals, &c.

The poet here advises their learning philosophy, that their minds might be furnished with what would suffice to support them through the journey of life, and more particularly through the latter part of it, when under the miseries and infirmities of old age.

66. "To-morrow, &c."] Persius here introduces some idle young man, as if saying—"To be sure you advise very rightly, "but give me a little time—to-morrow" (q. d. some time hence) "I will apply myself to the studies which you recommend."

—"The same will be done to-morrow."] When to-morrow comes, answers Persius, the same thing will be done ; that is, you will want to defer it for a day more.

66. "What !

‘Nempe diem donas?’ Sed cum lux altera venit,

66. “What! &c.] What! replies the procrastinator, won’t you allow me another day before I begin?—what! do you make such a mighty matter of giving me a day, as if that were of so great consequence?

68. “Yesterday’s to-morrow.] But, rejoins Persius, when another day comes, remember that yesterday, which was the morrow of the day before it, and which you wished to be allowed you, is passed and gone.

— Beh!d another to-morrow.] This day, which is the morrow of yesterday, is now arrived, and is, with all the past morrows, exhausting and consuming these years of ours; and thus the time you ask for will always be put off, and stand a little beyond the morrow you fix upon.

70. Alibi’ near you, &c.] The poet, in allusion to the hind-wheel of a carriage, which is near to, and follows the fore-wheel, but never can overtake it, gives the young man to understand, that, though to-day is nearly connected with to-morrow, in point of time, yet it can’t overtake it, the morrow will always keep on from day to day, and it can never be overtaken—thus shewing, that procrastinated time will always fly on, and keep out of his reach; however near he may be to it, all his resolutions to overtake it will be in vain.

— Under one beam.] Temo signifies the beam of the wain, or the draught-tree, whereon the yoke hangeth. Sometimes, by synec. the whole carriage.—q. d. Our days may be considered as the wheels by which our lives roll on; each day, as well as another, is joined to the space allotted us, like wheels to the same chariot.

71. The felly.] Canthus properly signifies the iron where-with the wheel is bound, or shod, on the outward circle, called the felly—here, by synec. the wheel itself.

72. The second axle.”] Axis—the axle-tree on which the wheel is fixed, and about which it turns—the second, i. e. the hinder.—q. d. You will, like the hinder-wheel of a carriage, which can never overtake the fore-wheel, be still following the time before you, but will never overtake it; therefore defer not

There is need of liberty: not this, by which every Pub-lius in the Velinan tribe,
 As soon as he has been discharged, mouldy corn with his tally till to-morrow what you should do to-day. The whole of the metaphor, l. 70—2, is very fine, and well expressed. See Hor. Lib. ii. Ode xviii. l. 15, 16.

I must confess that I cannot dismiss this part of my task, without mentioning that beautiful description of the slipping away of time, unperceived and unimproved, which we find in Shakespeare—

"To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
 "Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
 "To the last syllable of recorded time;
 "And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
 "The way to dusty death.——

Macb. Act v. Sc. v. edit. STOCKDALE.

73. There is need of liberty.] The poet now advances to a discussion of that paradox of the Stoics—that "only the wise
 "are free;"—and that those, who would follow after, and attain to true liberty, must be released from the mental shackles of vice and error.—His treatment of the subject is exquisitely fine, and worthy our serious attention.

——Not this.] Not merely outward liberty, or liberty of the body, such as is conferred on slaves at their manumission.

——By which.] See l. 74, note 2.

——Every Publius.] The slaves had no prænomen; but when they had their freedom given them, they assumed one—so, for instance, a slave that was called Licinius, would add the name of his master to his own, and call himself, if his master's name were Publius, Publius Licinius—they also added the name of the tribe into which they were received and inrolled; suppose the the Velinan, then the freed-man would style himself Publius Licinius Velina—thus he was distinguished from slaves.

74. Been discharged.] i. e. From slavery—made free. Emeruit—metaph. from soldiers, who for some meritorious service were sent home, and discharged from going to war. Also from gladiators, who for their valour and dexterity at the theatre obtained their dismissal from their perilous occupation, and were donati rude, presented with a rod, or wand, in token of their discharge and release. Hor. Epist. i. Lib. i. l. 2. Juv. Sat. vi. 113. These were styled Emeriti.

So slaves were often made free, on account of their past services, as having deserved this favour—this is signified by emeruit here.

— Mouldy corn, &c.] Those who were thus admitted to freedom, and inrolled in one of the tribes, were entitled to all public doles and donations, on producing a little ticket or tally, which was given them on their manumission. The corn laid up in the public magazines was not of the best sort, and was frequently damaged with keeping.

The name of the person, and of the tribe which he belonged to, were inscribed on the ticket, by which he was known to be a citizen. See Juv. Sat. vii. l. 174, note.

75. Alas! ye barren, &c.] The poet speaks with commiseration of their ignorance, and total barrenness, with respect to truth and real wisdom, who could imagine that a man should be called free, because he was emancipated from bodily slavery.

— One turn.] Vertigo (from vertere, to turn). This was one of the ceremonies of making a slave free: he was carried before the prætor, who turned him round upon his heel, and said—Hunc esse liberum volo.

So Plautus, Menæchm. Liber esto, ito quo voles. Thus he became Quiris, a Roman citizen. See Juv. Sat. iii. l. 60, note.

76. Here is Dama.] For instance, says the poet, here is the slave Dama.

— A groom not worth, &c.] Agaso, an horse-keeper, a groom that looks after his master's horses. Non tressis (quæ tres asse) asse) affes) a poor, paltry fellow, worth hardly three farthings if one were to purchase him. They bought their slaves.

77. A scoundrel.] Vappa signifies wine that is passed, that has lost its strength, therefore called vapid.—Hence a stupid, senseless fellow; or a scoundrel, a good-for-nothing fellow.

— Blear-eyed.] Perhaps from debauchery and drunkenness. See Sat. ii. l. 72, note.

— A liar in a little corn.] That will cheat his master, and defraud his horses of their slender allowance, and then lye to conceal his petty knavery. Farrago is a mixture of several grains—Miscelline.

78. If his master, &c.] Let his master but turn him upon his heel. See note above, l. 75.

— Movement of a top.] In one turn of a top, which is very swift when it is spinning—i. e. as we say, in the twinkling of an eye. This allusion to the turning of a top, very humourously agrees with the verterit.

— He comes forth, &c.] He that went before the prætor plain Dama, now comes out from him with a noble prænomen, and calls himself Marcus Dama.

79. Wonderful!] What a surprising change! or papæ may introduce the following irony, where a person is supposed to hesitate about lending money, for which Marcus offers to become surety. Papæ—How strange! that you should scruple it, when so respectable a person as Marcus offers his bond, and engages for the payment!

80. Are you pale?] Do you fear lest you should not have justice done you, where so worthy a person is advanced to the magistracy?

81. Marcus said it, &c.] Marcus gives his testimony, and who can contradict so just and upright a witness—what he says must be true.

81. Sign,

Hæc mera libertas ! Hoc nobis pilea donant !

‘ Excepto, si quid Mafuri rubrica notavit ?’

90

81. Sign, Marcus, the tablets.] The poet repeats the word Marcus, and drops the word Dama, as if he would ludicrously insinuate, that however great a rogue Dama was, yet to be sure Marcus was a very different kind of person. He supposes him called upon to sign his name, as witness to somebody's will, which he could not do when a slave, for their testimony was not received.

— The tablets.] Thin planks of wood, smeared over with wax, on which they wrote wills, deeds, &c. See Juv. Sat. ii. l. 58, note. Here the will or deed itself.

The poet, in the preceding irony, carries on his grand point, which was to deride the common notion of liberty, or of a change being wrought, with regard to the respectability of those who were still, however emancipated from bodily slavery, slaves under ignorance, vice, and error.

82. Mere liberty.] Mera—bare, naked liberty (says the Stoic)—i. e. in the bare, outward, literal sense of the word ; but it is to be understood no farther.

— This caps give us.] The slaves went bare-headed, with their hair growing long, and hanging down : but when they were manumitted, their heads were shaved, and a cap, the ensign of liberty, put on their heads in the temple of Feronia, the goddess of liberty. See Sat. iii. l. 106.

83. “ Any other free, &c.] Here the poet introduces Dama as replying—“ Aye, you may deride my notions of liberty ; but pray who is free if I am not ? Is there any other freedom but to be able to live as one pleases ? But I may live as I please—therefore am I not free ?”—by this syllogism thinking to prove his point.

85. More free than Brutus ?] M. Junius Brutus, the great assertor and restorer of liberty, by the expulsion of the Tarquins, &c. who sacrificed his own sons in the cause of freedom, and changed the form of the government into a commonwealth.

— “ You conclude falsely. ”] Your argument is bad ; the assumption which you make, that “ you live as you please, ” is not true,

This is mere liberty—this caps give us.

“Is there any other free, unless he who may live

A Stoic here, having washed his ear with sharp vinegar:

“Except if the rubric of Mafurius forbade any thing?” 90 true, therefore the conclusion which you gather or collect from it is false, namely, “that you are free.” See AINSW. Colligo, N° 6.

85—6. Says a Stoic.] i. e. Methinks I hear some Stoic say.

—Washed his ear, &c.] At l. 63. we find purgatas aures, where see the note; here, lotus aurem, meaning also the same as before, only under a different image, differently expressed.—By vinegar, here, we are to understand the sharp and severe doctrines of the Stoic philosophy, which has cleansed his mind from all such false ideas of liberty, and made his ear quick in the discernment of truth and falsehood.

87. “I accept, &c.] Your definition of liberty in your first proposition is true; I grant that “all who may live as they please are free;”—but I deny your minor, or second proposition, viz. “that you live as you please;” therefore your conclusion, viz. “that you are free,” is also wrong.

—That—“I may,” and “as I will.”] i. e. Take away your minor proposition, and I admit what remains—hoc reliquum accipio—viz. all that is contained in the first proposition—that “all who may live as they please are free:”—this is certainly a good definition of liberty; but this is not your case.

88. From the prætor.] Before whom I was carried, in order to receive my freedom.

—My own.] Meus—i. e. my own master; being made free, and emancipated from the commands of another, replies Dama, not at all understanding what the Stoic meant by liberty.

—By the wand.] Vindictâ.—The prætor laid a wand upon the slave's head, and said—“I will that this man become free,” and then delivered the wand out of his own hand into the lictor's; (see post, l. 175). This wand was called vindicta, as vindicating, or maintaining, liberty. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. vii. l. 76.

letters, which was called the Rubric. DRYDEN.—According to others, the titles and beginnings of the different statutes were only written in red, and therefore to be understood by rubrica. See AINSW. See Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 192—3, note.

90. Masurius.] An eminent and learned lawyer, in the reign of Tiberius, who made a digest of the Roman laws.

q. d. When I received my freedom from the prætor, surely I was at liberty to do as I would, except, indeed, breaking the law; I don't say that I might do this.

91. "Learn.] The Stoic here begins his argument, in order to refute what Dama was supposed to say in support of his notion of liberty.

Now listen to me, says the Stoic, that you may learn what true liberty is, and in what it consists.

— Let anger fall, &c.] Cease from your anger at me, for ridiculing your notion of liberty.

It is to be remarked, that the ancients represented the nose as denoting laughter, Sat. i. 118. Contempt, Sat. i. 40—1. Anger, as here.—So we find the nose, or nostrils, denoting anger frequently in the Hebrew Bible. See the learned and accurate Mr. Parkhurst, Heb. and Eng. Lex. נֶסֶם, N° v.

— Wrinkling sneer.] Comp. Sat. i. 40—1, and note.

92. From your breast, &c.] Pulmo, literally, signifies the lungs; but here denotes the whole contents of the breast in a moral sense.—"Put away anger and sneering at what I say, while I pluck up those foolish notions of liberty, which are implanted and rooted within your mind, and with which you are as pleased and satisfied, as a child is with an old woman's tale. Avia is literally a grandame, or grandmother: hence old women's tales. AINSW.—Fabellæ aniles. Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. vi. l. 77—8. Γραυδὴς μύθος. 1 Tim. iv. 7.

93. It was not of, &c.] It was not in the power of the prætor.

— The delicate management of things, &c.] Though the prætor might confer civil liberty upon you at your manumission, and though you may know how to direct yourself, so as to avoid offending against the letter of the law—yet you could receive from the prætor none of that wisdom and discernment, by which alone

- " Learn: but let anger fall from your nose, and the
 " wrinkling sneer,
 " While I pluck from your breast your old wives tales.
 " It was not of the prætor to give the delicate manage" ment of things
 " To fools, and to permit the use of rapid life—
 " You would sooner fit a dulcimer to a tall footman. 95
 " Reason stands against it, and whispers into the secret ear,"
 " Let it not be lawful to do that, which one will spoil in " doing:"—

alone you can distinguish aright, as touching those more minute and delicate actions which concern you in the more nice duties of life, and which are to be attained by philosophy alone.—I take this to be meant by tenuia officia rerum—lit. small offices, or duties of things or affairs.

94. To fools.] The Stoics held, that " all fools were " slaves,"—and that " nobody was free except the wise." A man must therefore be wise before he is free; but the prætor could not make you wise, therefore he could not make you free.

— To permit the use.] It was not in the prætor's power to commit to such that prudence and wisdom, by which they can alone be enabled to make a right use of this fleeting life, and of all things belonging to it.

95. Sooner fit, &c.] Sambuca was some musical instrument, as an harp, dulcimer, or the like; but what it exactly was we cannot tell.

— A tall footman.] Alto caloni.—Calo, a soldier's boy, or any meaner sort of servant. Ans.—Horace seems to use it in the latter sense, Lib. i. Sat. vi. l. 103; and perhaps it is so to be understood here.

You might sooner think of putting a harp, or some delicate musical instrument, into the hands of a great overgrown booby of a servant, and expect him to play on it, than to commit the nice and refined duties of life to fools, and expect them either to understand or practise them.—Asinus ad Lyram. Prov.

96. Reason stands against it.] Reason itself opposes such an idea.

— Whispers into the secret ear.] Secretly whispers into the ear. Hypallage.—Comp. sup. l. 40, and note.

97. Let it not be lawful.] Ne, before the potential, has the sense of the imperative mood. So Hor. Ode xxxiii. Lib. i. l. 1. Ne doleas; and Ode xi. 1. Ne quæsieris. Here, ne liceat is likewise imperative, and signifies that the voice of reason secretly whispers in the ear this admonition—"Let it not be permitted, that any should undertake what they are not fit for, but would "spoil in doing it." Or ne liceat may be understood, here, as non licet.

98. The public law of men.] The common rule among mankind, as well as nature, may be said to contain thus much of what is right and just.

99. That weak ignorance, &c.] That an ignorance of what we undertake, which must render us inadequate to the right performance of it, should restrain us from attempting acts, which, by the voice of human, as well as of natural law, are so clearly forbidden to us. Comp. l. 96, 97.

100. Do you dilute hellebore.] He here illustrates his argument by examples.

Suppose, says he, you were to attempt to mix a dose of hellebore, not knowing how to apportion exactly the quantity.

100—1. To a certain point.] Metaph.—Examen signifies the tongue, or beam of a balance, by the inclination of which we judge of proportional weights.

101. The nature of healing forbids this.] All medical skill, in the very nature of it, must place this among the vetitos actus, which weak ignorance is not to attempt. See l. 99.

102. High-shoed ploughman.] Peronatus.—The pero was an high shoe worn by rustics, as a defence against snow and cold. See Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 186.

103. Ignorant of Lucifer.] Knowing nothing of the stars.—Lucifer, or the day-star, is here put (by synec.) for all the stars, from which mariners take their observations to steer by.

—Melicerta exclaims, &c.] Also called Portunus, or Portumnus, because supposed to preside over ports. See his story, Ov. Met. Lib. iv. Fab. xiii.—Melicerta, the sea-god, would exclaim, that all modesty was banished from among those who under-deck

" The public law of men, and nature, contains this right,
 " That weak ignorance should forbear forbidden acts.

 " coal ?

dertook the management and direction of human affairs, when he saw so impudent an attempt.

103. Shame.] Frontem, lit. the forehead, or countenance, the seat of shame—here, by met. shame or modesty itself.

104. Upright ankle.] Metaph. from persons having their legs and ankles strait, and walking uprightly ; which is often used, to denote going on through life with an honest and virtuous conduct. This occurs frequently in S. S. as Ps. xv. 2. lxxxiv. 11. Prov. x. 9. & al.

105. Has art, &c.] That is philosophy, which is the art of living well—has this enabled you to do this ?

106. Left any, &c.] Ne qua—i. e. ne aliqua species veri.—Have you learnt to distinguish between the appearance and reality of truth and virtue, lest you should be deceived, as people are who take bad money for good, when, instead of answering to the appearance of the outside, which is fair, they find, upon founding it, that it is brass underneath, instead of being all gold.

108. Mark'd those with chalk, &c.] The antients used to note things good and prosperous with a white mark, and things bad and unlucky with a black one. In allusion to this, the Stoic is supposed to ask the question in the preceding line, which is, not only whether his opponent has been taught to distinguish the appearances of good and evil, but whether he has Mendosum tinniat, for mendosè: Græcism.

109. Moderate of wish.] The desires confined within the bounds of moderation.

— A confined household.] Your household-establishment frugal, and not-expensive—contracted within a little compass; or, perhaps, by presso lare, may be signified a small house.

— Kind to your friends.] Dulcis—obliging, sweet, agreeable. See Hor. Lib. i. Sat. iv. l. 135.

110. Sometimes fasten, &c.] Judging rightly when it is a time to withhold, and when to give. Here perhaps is an allusion to the public granaries, or magazines of corn at Rome, which, at a time of dearth and want, was dealt out in doles to the citizens, on producing their tickets, but, at other seasons, locked up. Jam nunc—lit. just now—i. e. just at a proper time.

111. Can you pass by money, &c.] Alluding to a practice among the boys at Rome, who used to fasten a piece of counterfeit money to the ground, or stick it in the mud, with a string tied to it; and if any miserly fellow coming by, and imagining it to be real, stooped to pick it up, they snatched it away, and laughed at him.

In triviis fixum qui se demittit ob assem.

Hor. Lib. i. Epist. xvi. l. 64.

112. Mercurial spittle.] Mercury was the god of gain: hence a desire of gain is called saliva mercurialis. Metaph. from gluttons, who, at beholding some dainty dish, have their spittle increase in such a manner, as that, if they did not swallow it, it would run out of the mouth. This we call—the mouth watering. Can you see money without your mouth watering at it?—i. e. without being greatly delighted, and coveting it?

113. Theje.] All these good qualities.

114. Prætors and Jupiter propitious.] I then allow you to be free in the sight of God and man—i. e. not only with respect to the liberty of the body, which you received from the prætor, but with respect to freedom of the mind, of which Jupiter alone is the author.

115. But if you.] Now he comes to the other side of the question—

— Since you.] Since you, but a little before your manumission, was just like what we were till taught by philosophy—i. e. naturally full of ignorance and error.

— Of our meal.] Metaph. taken from loaves of bread, which are all alike, and taste alike, if made of the same flour—so mankind, having the same nature, are all corrupt.

116. Retain your old skin.] Metaph. taken from snakes, which cast off their old skin, and have a new one every year.—q. d. If you retain your old depraved manners and conduct (see l. 76—7) and have not changed and cast them off.

— Polished in front.] Appearing with a countenance seemingly open and ingenuous.—Necquicquam pelle decorus. Sat. iv. l. 14.

117. Keep a cunning fox, &c.] Entertain wily, cunning, and deceitful principles within—— Your vapid breast.] Within your rotten heart. See l. 77, note.

An dominum ignoras, niſi quem vindicta relaxat ? 125

118. I demand again.] I recall.

— And bring back the rope.] Metaph. from leading beaſts with a rope, which ſometimes they lengthened, and gave the animal a good deal of liberty, (ſee Juv. Sat. xii. l. 5.) ; but, if reſſive and miſchievous, they ſhortened it to confine him. Thus the Stoic, who lengthened his allowance ſo far as to pronounce the man wiſe and free, ſuppoſing him to answer the deſcription which he gives of thoſe who are ſo, now, on finding the contrary, draws back what he had ſaid, and reduces the man to his old narrow bounds of bodily freedom only.

119. Reason has granted you nothing.] Whatever the prætor may have done, wiſdom has done nothing for you.

— Put forth your finger, you ſin.] The Stoics held, that there was no medium between wiſdom and folly, that a man was either perfectly wiſe, or perfectly fooliſh ; therefore, that the moſt trivial and indifferent thing, if done by the latter, could not be done aright, not even the putting forth of a finger.

120. What is ſo ſmall ?] “ What can be ſo trivial as this ? ” — yet, trivial as it is, it can only be done by the wiſe and free, as it ought, any more than every other action, of what nature or kind ſoever.

— Will obtain.] Lito ſignifies, not only to ſacrifice, but to obtain that for which the ſacrifice is offered. See Sat. ii. l. 75, and note.

121. Half ounce of right, &c.] In ſhort, the Stoics held, that not a grain of what was right could reſide within any but the wiſe and free, in their ſenſe of the words ; or, in truth, in any but their own ſect—all the reſt of the world they accounted fools and mad, and that though they were to offer incenſe, in ever ſo great a quantity, to the gods, yet they could never obtain a ſingle fixed principle of what was right.

122. To mix theſe, &c.] i. e. Wiſdom and folly ; there muſt be either all one, or all the other. See above, note on l. 119. It is impoſſible they ſhould be mixed in the ſame perſon.

— A digger.] Foſſor—a ditcher, delver, and the like—q. d. A mere clown.

q. d. When, in every thing elſe—cætera, i. e. quoad cætera,

" Reason has granted you nothing : put forth your finger,

 " thyllus."

" I am free."—" Whence take you this for granted, sub" jected by so many things ?

" Are you ignorant of a master, unless he whom the wand
 " relaxes ?" 125

Græcism—you are as clumsy and awkward as a common loat or clown, it is impossible that you should dance, even three steps, like the famous dancer Bathyllus. Perhaps the poet, by folior, alludes to the slaves, who were set to dig with fetters on their legs. See Juv. xi. 80.

123. The satyr Bathyllus.] He was a famous dancer in the time of Nero, and, for his great agility and nimble movements, was surnamed the Satyr.—Saltantes Satyros. Virg. Ecl. v. 73.

The Stoic concludes this part of his argument with averring, that those who are not wise and free, as in every thing else they are unable to do what is right, so neither can they, in the most trivial or indifferent action ; any more than an awkward clown could dance like Bathyllus for three steps together. See Juv. Sat. vi. l. 63.

124. "I am free."] " Aye, it is all very well," says Dama ; " but I do insist upon it, that I am free, notwithstanding all you " say."

—" Whence take you this, &c.] Datum is a technical term—when any thing is yielded, agreed, and granted as true, it is called a datum.—" Now," answers the Stoic, " whence had " you that datum, for so it appears to you, that you are free, be- " cause you have had your freedom given you by the prætor's " wand, you who are put under (subdite) the power and domi- " nion of so much error and folly ?"

125. Are you ignorant, &c.] " Know you not any other " master than he who exercised an outward authority over you, " till he was released from it by the prætor's wand ?" See be- fore, l. 88, note.

126. Go, slave, and carry, &c.] I grant you that you have nothing to fear from your late master. If he were, in a loud and surly manner, to bawl out—“Here, slave, carry these scrapers, &c.” and scold you for the least delay—

127—8. Sharp servitude, &c.] However sharp and severe bodily servitude may be, yet you have nothing to do with it, it can’t enforce any such orders upon you.

128. Nor does any thing enter, &c.] Nor can any thing, as threats, or menaces, of being punished for not obeying, enter into your mind, so as to make you uneasy; all this I grant—in this sense you are free.

129. But if within.] If vice and folly, generated within your disordered heart, are your masters, and rule over you, so as to compel your obedience to their commands.

Jecore ægro. See Juv. Sat. i. l. 45, and note.—The ancients looked on the liver as the seat of the concupiscible and irascible affections, and therefore jecore ægro may be understood, metonymically, to denote the diseased or disordered affections, for vice is the sickness or disease of the mind.

130. How go you forth, &c.] How can you be said to be less liable to punishment, from the slavery and misery of your mind, than the poor slave is, in a bodily sense, when compelled to obey his master, from the terror of bodily punishment. The only difference between you is, he serves his master, you your vices.

131. The scrapers.] Strigiles.—These were instruments which the Greeks and Romans made use of to scrape their bodies after bathing, and were carried to the baths by their slaves. Driven to the scrapers—i. e. has forced to carry the scrapers to the baths, when ordered.

132. Stoibful, you snore.] The poet proceeds to illustrate and confirm his argument (in which he has been contending for the “slavery of all but the wise,” according to the Stoic doctrine)

by

"Go, slave, and carry the scrapers to the baths of Crispinus,"
 "If he has sounded forth—do you loiter, trifler?" "Sharp
 "Servitude impels thee nothing, nor does any thing enter

 "Masters are produced, how go you forth more unpunished, 130
 "Than he, whom the scourge, and fear of his master, has "driven to the scrapers?
 "In the morning, slothful, you snore: "Rise," says
 "Avarice, "O fie!
 "Rise."—You refuse—he urges—"Rise," says he.—"I "cannot."—"Rise."
 "And what shall I do?" "do you ask?—bring fish from
 "Pontus,
 "Castor, flax, ebony, frankincense, and slippery Coan
 "wines: 135

by instancing the power of sloth, avarice, and luxury, over the human mind, in its corrupted state.

He introduces a dialogue between Dama and Avarice. Avarice is supposed to find Dama snoring abed in the morning, in the luxurious ease of his so highly-prized freedom.

132. "Rise," says Avarice.] This word, "Rise," is repeated four times. Thus Vice ceases not from its importunity; and the answers of Dama, "I will not"—"I cannot"—"what shall I do if I rise?"—are a lively representation of the power of idleness and sloth, when indulged. This is finely described, Prov. vi. 9, 10. xxii. 13. xxvi. 13, 14.

134. Fish from Pontus.] Saperdas—a sort of fish which came from Pontus, or the Black Sea.

135. Castor.] Castoreum.—This signifies either beavers skins, or what we call castor—i. e. the medicinal part of the animal; both of which were articles of traffic. See Juv. Sat. xii. l. 34—6.

—Hemp.] Stuppa, or stupa—the coarse part of flax, tow, hards, oakum to calk ships with. AINSW.

—Ebony.] A black wood, well known among us—the tree whereof bears neither leaves nor fruit. AINSW.

—Slippery Coan wines.] From the island Co, or Coos, in the

136. Take first the recent pepper.] Be sure be at the market first, that you may not only have the first choice, but return to a better sale, by coming home before the other merchants.

Hor. Lib. i. Epist. vi. l. 32—3.

—Cave ne portus occupet alter,
 Ne Cybiratica, ne Bithyna negotia perdas.

—Thirsting camel.] The eastern people loaded their pepper and other spices on the backs of camels. These animals are said to endure thirst, in their journies over the deserts, for many days together; wherefore, in a part of the world where water is very scarce, they are peculiarly useful.

137. Turn something.] Trade, barter—i. e. as we say, turn the penny.

—Swear.] Don't mind a little perjury upon occasion, either with respect to the goodness of your wares, or concerning the first cost, and what you can afford to sell them at.

—“Jupiter will bear.”] Dama is supposed to raise a scruple of conscience.

137—8. Alas! simpleton.] Baro, or varo—a servant that waited upon the common soldiers, who was usually very stupid and ignorant—hence a blockhead, a dolt, a foolish fellow.

138. To bore with your finger, &c.] If you aim at living (i. e. living in amity) with Jupiter, you must not think of trading to increase your fortune, but must be content to live in a poor, mean way. The poorer sort of people lived upon bread, with a little salt. Persius supposes the Stoic to tell Dama, that if he would not perjure himself, in order to get money by trade, he must be content to put his finger, and endeavour to scrape up a little salt from the bottom of his one poor saltcellar; where there were only a few grains left, from his having done this so often, in order to give a relish to his palate, by licking his fingers, after they had rubbed the bottom of the saltcellar, as if he meant to bore it through. This is proverbial, to express very great poverty. Salem lingere signified to live in the utmost poverty—to fare poorly.—Plaut. Cürull. Act iv. Sc. the last.

 “ Quick to the ship : nothing hinders, but in a large ship
 “ You may hurry over the Ægean ; unless fly Luxury should

Hic hodiè apud me nunquam delinges salem ; that is as much as to say—“ you shan’t eat a morsel.”

140. Now, ready.] Succinctus—literally, girt, trussed up. The ancients wore long, loose garments, which, when they prepared to travel, they girded, or trussed up, about their loins, that they might walk the more freely. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. vi. 107. Hence, being ready, prepared ; also nimble, expeditious. See Exod. xii. 11, former part. 1 Kings, xviii. 46. Luke xii. 35.

— Fit the skin, &c.] They had wallets, or knapsacks, made of skins, in which they packed their clothes and other necessities when they travelled either by land or sea.

You put your knapsack, and your cask of wine for the voyage, on the backs of your slaves, to carry on board.

141. Quick to the ship.] You lose no time, you hurry to get on board.

— Nothing binders.] Nothing stands in your way to prevent the immediate execution of your plan, or to discourage you—unless— See l. 142, note 2.

— A large ship.] Trabs is a beam, or any great piece of timber, of which ships are built : here, by syn. the whole ship. See Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 276. Virg. Æn. iii. 191.

142. The Ægean.] A part of the Mediterranean Sea, near Greece, dividing Europe from Asia. It is now called the Archipelago, and, by the Turks, the White Sea. Its name is supposed to be derived from Αἴγος, Dor. Fluctus, from its turbulent waves. From this dangerous sea are made two adages ; viz. Ægeum scaphulâ transmittere—to cross the Ægean Sea in a little boat—i. e. to undertake a weighty business with small abilities ; and Ægeum navigare—to undertake an hazardous enterprise. See AINSW. Hence our Stoic mentions this sea in particular, to shew the power of avarice over the mind that is enslaved slaved by it, and that no dangers will deter from its pursuits—Nihil obstat, says he.

142. Sly Luxury.] Solers—shrewd; wily, cunning.

We have seen the victory of Avarice over sloth, now Luxury is introduced, as putting in its claim for the mastery.

Thus, says the Stoic, will Avarice lord it over you, and drag you in her chains over the dangerous Ægean for lucre's sake, unless, being beforehand seduced and enthralled by Luxury, you should listen to her admonitions. Antè—i. e. before you put in practice what Avarice has advised.

143. Whither thence, &c.] Whither from that warm and comfortable bed of yours, on which you so delightfully repose yourself, are you running headlong (ruis) like a madman as you are? See l. 132.

144. Manly bile, &c.] Masculus—male; hence manly, stout, hardy, than which nothing is more opposite to luxury.—Your warm breast—i. e. heated and inflamed with the ardent desire which now possesses you to face the danger of the sea; for this an hardy rage is risen up, (intumuit) swells within you, says Luxury, and stirs you up to this dangerous resolution.

145. Urn of hemlock.] An urn was a measure of about four gallons. Cicuta—an herb like our hemlock, the juice of which was of an extremely cold nature, so as to be a deadly poison, when taken in a certain quantity. See Sat. iv. 2. Also a sort of hellebore, administered medicinally in madness, or frenzies, to cool the brain. See AINSW. Cicuta, N° 1, 2.

Quæ poterunt unquam satis expurgare cicutæ.

Hor. Epist. ii. Lib. ii. 53.

146. Can you cross the sea?] Can you be so forgetful of the blandishments of ease and luxury, as to subject yourself to the dangers and inconveniences of a sea-voyage?

—A supper, &c.] Instead of an elegant and well-spread table, can you bear to eat your supper upon a rough plank; and instead of an easy couch, to be supported by a coil of cable, by way of a seat?

147. Red Veientane wine.] A coarse, bad wine, such as seamen carried with them among their sea-stores. See Hor. Lib. ii.
 Sat. iii. l. 143.

148. The broad-bottomed jug.] Obba—a bowl or jug with a great belly and broad bottom, that sitteth, as it were—sessilis.—
 This sort of jug, or bowl, was peculiarly useful at sea, because not easily thrown down by the motion of the ship.

— Exhale.] Cast forth the fumes of.

— Hurt with nasty pitch?] Smelling and tasting of the pitch, with which every thing on board a ship is daubed—this, perhaps, was the case with the obba: or the pitch may be meant, with which the vessel which held the wine was stopped, and which being of a coarse sort, might give a disagreeable taste to the liquor.

149. What seek you?] What errand are you going upon?
 Is it to make better interest of your money, than you can make by staying at home?

— Modest five per cent.] This, as among us, was not reckoned usurious, but modest—i. e. moderate, legal interest.

150. Nourished.] Metaph. from nourishing, nursing, fostering a child, making it thrive and grow: hence applied to money, as increasing it by care.

— To sweat.] Metaph. from the effect of toil and labour—these must attend those who endeavour to make extraordinary interest of their money, by trading to foreign countries.

— Greedy.] Metaph. from an immoderate desire of food.

Those who strive to make exorbitant interest of their money, may well be called greedy of gain; and hence the epithet greedy is applied to the gain itself.

150. Cent. per cent.] Deunx—a pound lacking an ounce. A duodecim, unâ demptâ uncia. Eleven ounces—eleven parts of another thing divided into twelve: so that deunces, here, signifies eleven pounds gained by every twelve, which is gaining very near cent. per cent. as we say.

151. Indulge your genius.] Here genio means natural inclination. Indulgere genio, to make much of himself. ANSW.

— Pluck sweets.] Metaph. from plucking fruits or flowers. Hor. Lib. i. Ode xi. l. 8.

Carpe diem.

q. d. Let us seize on and enjoy the sweets of life.

This sentiment is finely expressed in the apocryphal book of Wisdom, ch. ii. 6, & seq.

Luxury has been dissuading Dama from attempting his voyage, by representing the dangers and inconveniences which must attend it: now she invites him to stay, that he may not lose the pleasures of ease and luxury, which the shortness of life affords him but a little time for the enjoyment of.

151—2. Mine that you live.] i. e. It is owing to me, says Luxury, that you enjoy the pleasures and sweets of life, without which, to live is not life. Βίη βίη διαμνησὶς ἡ ἐστὶ βίος—says the Greek proverb. Among us—“May we live all the days of our lives,” is a common convivial expression.

Horace, on another occasion, says to the muse Melpomene,

Quod spiro & placeo, si placeo, tuum est.

Lib. iv. Ode iii. l. 24.

152. Become ashes.] You will soon die, and be carried to the funeral pile, where you will be burnt to ashes.

— A ghost.] Manes—a spirit separated from the body.

— A fable.] Fabula (from for-faris, to speak or talk) a subject of discourse. Persius, here, some think to allude to Horace’s fabulæque manes—i. e. manes de quibus multæ sunt fabulæ—the manes who are much talked of. Lib. i. Ode iv. l. 16.

But as the Stoic is here speaking as an Epicurean, who believes body and soul to die together, I should rather think that fabula, here, means an invented story, a groundless tale—for Ætas.

The late lord Hervey, in a poetical epistle to a friend, applies this very beautifully—

"Even now, while I write, time steals on our youth,

"And a moment's cut off from thy friendship and truth."

The whole of Luxury's argument amounts to—"Let us eat "and drink, for to-morrow we die." If. xxii. 13. 1 Cor. xv.
 32.

154. Lo! what do you?] The Stoic now turns his discourse, immediately, as from himself, to Dama, whom he has represented as beset by Avarice and Luxury, and at a loss which to obey. Now, says he, what can you do, under these different solicitations?

— You are divided, &c.] Metaph. from angling, with two hooks fixed to the line, and differently baited, so that the fish are doubtful which to take.

155. This do you follow, &c.] Hunc—dominum understood.—Which master will you follow—Avarice or Luxury?

— By turns it beboves, &c.] The truth is, that you will sometimes go under, or yield to, the dominion of the one, sometimes of the other, alternately—ancipiti obsequio—doubting which you shall serve most. Alternus -a -um. See ANSW.

156. Wander.] Oberres—be like one that is at a loss, and wanders up and down; you will wander in your determinations which to serve, at times, their commands being contrary to each other.—Avarice bids you get more—Luxury bids you enjoy what you have.

157. Withstood, &c.] Perhaps for once, or so, you may refuse to obey their most importunate solicitations and commands; but don't, from this, conclude that you are free from their service. It is not a single instance, but a whole tenor of resistance to vice, which constitutes freedom. Instanti—earnest, urgent.

159. A dog, &c.] A dog may struggle till he breaks his chain, but then runs away with a long piece of it hanging to him at his neck, by which he is not only incommoded in his flight, but easily laid hold of, and brought back to his confinement. Canis—here feminine—lit. a bitch.

So will it be with you; you may break loose, for a while, from the bondage and service of vice, but those inbred principles of evil, which you will carry about you, will hinder your total escape, and make it easy for the solicitations of your old masters to reduce you again into bondage to them. Therefore, while there remains any vice and folly within you, you will be a slave, however you may call yourself free.

161. Davus, &c.] The Stoic, in confirmation of his main argument, to prove that "all but the wise are slaves," having instanced sloth, avarice, and luxury, as lording it over the minds of men, now proceeds to shew that the passion of love is another of those chains by which the mind is bound.

- " This do you follow, or this? By turns it behoves that " you go under, 155
 " With doubtful obsequiousness, your masters: by turns,
 " you may wander.
 " Nor can you, when once you have withstood, and have " An instant command, say, "I now have broken my bonds."

 " For also a dog, having struggled, breaks the knot: but to
 " him,
 " When he flies, a long part of the chain is drawn by his " neck. 160
 " Davus, quickly (I command that this you believe) to " finish griefs
 " Past I meditate: (Chæresthratus, his raw nail " Gnawing, says these words) Shall I, a disgrace, oppose my " sober

He introduces a scene in the Eunuch of Menander, from which Terence took his Eunuch, where the lover is called Chæresthratus (in Terence, Phædria) communicating to his servant Davus (in Terence, Parmeno) his intention of leaving his mistress Chrysis (in Terence, Thais).

" Davus," says Chæresthratus " (and I insist on your believing me to be in earnest) I am thinking to give up my mistress, and to do this shortly—cito—and thus to put an end to all the plague and uneasiness which she has cost me."

162—3. His raw nail gnawing, &c.] Biting his nail to the quick; a very common action with people in deep and anxious thought.

163. " Shall I, a disgrace.] q. d. Shall I, who have made myself a disgrace to my family by keeping this woman—

— Oppost.] Act contrary to the wishes and advice of my sober relations?

Siccus signifies sober, in opposition to uvidus, soaked, mellow with liquor. Hor. Ode iv. 5. 38—40.

Dicimus integro
 Sicci manè die, dicimus uvidi
 Cum Sol oceano subest.

Hence sicci means sober, orderly people in general, in contradistinction to rakes and libertines.

164. Paternal estate, &c.] Spend and diminish my patrimony, at the expence of my reputation. Comp. Juv. Sat. xiv l. 1.

165. An obscene threshold.] At the house of an harlot.—Synec. limen for domum.

— Wet doors, &c.] The doors wet with the dew of the night.—“ Shall I serenade her at midnight, when I am drunken, “ and have put out the torch with which my servant is lighting “ me home, for fear of being seen and known by the passer “ by?”

167. “ Well done, &c.] “ Well done, my young master,” says Davus, “ I hope you will come to your senses at last.”

— Repelling gods, &c.] It was usual to offer a thank-offering to the gods, on a deliverance from any danger: hence Davus bids his master sacrifice a lamb—diis depellentibus—to the gods, whose office it was to repel and keep off evil. Perhaps Castor and Pollux are here meant, as they were reckoned peculiarly to avert mischief. See Delph. note.—Horace sacrificed a lamb to Faunus, the god of the fields and woods, for his escape from the falling tree. Lib. ii. Ode xvii. ad fin.—Averruncus—Deus qui mala avertit. ANSW.

168. “ Think you, Davus, &c.] Here the young man wavers in his resolution, and shews that he is still a slave to his passion for Chrysis—he can't bear the thought of making her uneasy.

169. “ You trifle—] answers Davus. Is this the way in which you are to put an end to all the plague and uneasiness of this amour, to be thus irresolute, and unable to bear the thought of her tears for the loss of you? Alas! how you trifle with yourself!

— You will be chidden, &c.] O foolish youth, when once Chrysis finds out that you are so fond of her, that you can't bear to grieve her by forsaking her, she will make her advantage of it; she will let you see her imperiousness, and will not only scold, but beat you.

hour, as well as to make use of them for the chastisement of their humble admirers. See Juv. Sat. vi. l. 611.

Thraso is represented by Terence (Eun. Act v. Sc. viii.) as intending, after his quarrel with the courtesan Thais, to surrender himself to her at discretion, and to do whatever she commanded. The parasite Gnatro says—Quid est?

THRASO. Qui minus quam Hercules servivit Omphale?

GN. Exemplum placet:

Utinam tibi commatigari videam sandalio caput.

From this answer of Gnatro, it seems likely that there was represented, on the Athenian stage, some comedy on the loves of Hercules and Omphale, in which that hero was seen spinning of wool, and his mistress sitting by, and beating him with her sandal, or slipper, when he did wrong. To this our poet may probably allude. See the ingenious Mr. COLMAN's translation of this passage, and the note.

170. To struggle.] i. e. That you may not again attempt your liberty. Metaph. from the fluttering of birds when caught on lime-twigs, who flutter their wings to free themselves, by which they are the more limed, and rendered more unable to escape. MARSHALL.

170. And bite, &c.] Metaph. from wild beasts taken in nets, or toils, who endeavour to free themselves by biting them asunder.

In short, Chrysis will so use you, if you again put yourself in her power, that you will not dare to attempt a second time to escape her.

171. Fierce and violent.] Now you are not with her you can bluster stoutly.

— Call.] i. e. Invite you to come to her—

— Without delay, &c.] You would instantly change your note, and say—

172. "What therefore, &c."] These are almost the words of Phædria, in Ter. Eun. Act. i. Sc. i. l. 1—2.

Quid igitur faciam ? non eam, ne nunc quidem
 Cum accerfor ultrò ?

173. "Whole and entire, &c."] " If when you left her, you had been entirely heart-whole, and had shaken off the yoke of lust and passion, you would not—nec nunc, not even now—return to her, even though she has sent to intreat you to it ; but, from your thought of yielding to her intreaties, I see very plainly that, notwithstanding all your deliberations about leaving her, you are still a slave to her."

174. Whom we seek.] The man who can so far emancipate himself from his passion, as to free himself from its dominion, so as no longer to be a slave to it, which Chæresistratus would have proved himself, if he could have kept his resolution against all solicitations to break it ; this is the man I mean, says the Stoic, this is the man I allow to be free.

175. Not in the usual, &c.] The better to explain this phrase, as well as l. 88 of this Satire, it may not be amiss to mention, particularly, the ceremony of manumission.

" The slave was brought before the consul, and, in after-times, before the prætor, by his master, who, laying his hand upon his servant's head, said to the prætor—Hunc hominem liberum esse volo, and, with that, let him go out of his hand, which they termed—ex manu emittere, whence manumission :—then the prætor, laying a rod upon his head, called vindicta, said—

- " Now fierce and violent: but, if she should call, without " delay you would say—
 " What therefore shall I do? now, when she can fend for " me, and willingly
 " Supplicate, shall I not go?"—" If whole and entire from

 " You had come forth, not now."—" This, this, this is he

 " Not in the wand which the foolish licitor shakes. 175
 " Has he the right of himself, whom gaping, with its " lure, chalked
 " Ambition leads? Watch: and heap vetches largely on the said—Dieq eum liberum esse more Quiritum; and turned him round on his heel. See l. 75—6. After this, the licitor, taking the rod out of the prætor's hand, struck the servant several blows on the head, face, and back (which part of the ceremony Persius refers to in this line), and nothing now remained but pileo donare, to present him with a cap in token of liberty, and to have his name entered in the common roll of freemen, with the reason of his obtaining that favour." See before, l. 88. See Kennet, Antiq. p. 100.

175. The foolish licitor.] Ineptus, here, is either used in contempt of the licitor, who was a sort of beadle, that carried the fasces before the prætor, and usually, perhaps, an ignorant, illiterate fellow; or it may be used in the sense of unapt, unfit, improper—i. e. to convey true liberty on the slave, whom he struck with the rod, in that part of the ceremony which fell to his share.

— Shakes.] Jacto—is to shake or move; to move to and fro, as in the action of striking often; also to brag or boast.

176. Right of himself.] The poet now instances, in the vice of ambition, another chain which binds the enslaved mind, and which hinders that freedom for which our Stoic is contending.

Can he call himself his own master—meus, l. 88; or say that he is sui juris—i. e. that he can dispose of himself as he pleases, as having a sovereign propriety in his person.

— Whom gaping.] Hiantem—gaping after, coveting greatly, like a creature gaping for food.

— With its lure.] Palpum -i, lit. a gentle, soft stroking with the hand: hence obtrudere palpum alicui—to wheedle, flatter, or coax. ATNSW.

176—7. Chalked ambition.] This expression alludes to the white garments

Rixanti populo, nostra ut Floralia possint.

Dispositæ, pinguem nebulam vomuêre lucernæ,

Portantes violas ; rubrumque amplexa catinum, garments worn by candidates for offices ; in these they went about to ask the people's votes, and from these white garments, which to make still whiter they rubbed over with chalk, they were called candidati.

177. Ambition] literally signifies a going about, from ambio : hence a suing or canvassing for favour—hence that desire of honour and promotion, which is called ambition.

— Watch—] says Ambition ; always be upon the look out ; lose no opportunity to make yourself popular.

— Heap vetches largely.] Those who aspired to public offices, endeavoured to gain the votes of the people by donations and largesses. These kinds of public bribes consisted in peas, beans, lupines or vetches, given away among the people. The Romans ran to such extravagance on these occasions, that several of the richest entirely ruined themselves. J. Cæsar employed in such largesses near a million and an half more than his estate was worth.

In cicere atque fabâ bona tu perdasque lupinis,

Latus ut in circo spatiâre, aut æneus ut stes—

HOR. Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 182—3.

178. Quarrelling people.] Quarrelling about their shares in the largesses and donations ; or, as we see at our elections, about the interests of the several candidates, whom they severally espoused.

— Our feasts, &c.] That the feasts which we gave, marked by our great liberality, may never be forgotten, to the latest old age of those who attended them.

— Feasts of Flora.] Flora was a noted courtesan in Rome, who having gotten a large sum of money by prostitution, made the Roman people her heir : but they, being ashamed of her profession, made her the goddess of flowers.

In honour of her feasts were held, and games exhibited, which were provided by the ædile, who, on this occasion, was very liberal in his donations to the people, in hopes of gaining their votes for an higher place in the magistracy. The Floralia were held on the 28th of April.

— Sunny old men.] Aprici senes—old men who loved to bask in the sun, the warmth of which was very acceptable to their cold habit of body, which old age brought on : their delight

was “ Quarrelling people, that our feasts of Flora funny old men “ May remember: what more glorious? but when

 “ The candles disposed, have vomited a fit cloud, “ Bearing violets; and, having embraced a red dish,

In the well-known, beautiful ballad of Darby and Joan, the poet has made use of this idea, as one description of the amusement of old age—

Together they totter about,
 Or sit in the sun at the door—&c.

179. What more glorious?] Than thus to recommend ourselves to the people, gain their favour, and leave a lasting memory of our munificence? Iron.

180. The days of Herod, &c.] Another chain in which the human mind is holden, is superstition; to this, all but the wise are slaves. He instances this in those Romans who had added themselves to many of the Jewish rites and superstitions, for such their whole religion appeared to the heathen. See Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 96—106. We find, by Matt. xiv. 6. and Mark vi. 21. that the king's birth-day was an high festival, observed at Herod's court; and, by this passage of Persius, it appears to have been celebrated by the Jews at Rome also, particularly by the Herodians, who constituted a society in honour of Herod, after the manner of the Sodalitia at Rome. See Broughton, Bibliotheca—tit. Herodians.

— Greasy window.] They stuck up candles, or lamps, in their windows, in token of a rejoicing-day—they lighted them early in the day (comp. Juv. Sat. xii. 92.) and by their flaring and guttering they made the frames of the windows on which they stood all over grease.

181. Fat cloud.] i. e. Of smoke.—An exact description of the smoke of a candle, or lamp, which is impregnated with particles of the fat, or grease, from which it ascends; as may be seen on ceilings, or other places, on which this smoke has alighted, and which, when they are attempted to be cleaned, are found to be soiled with a mixture of soot and grease.

Vomûere is a word well adapted to express the discharge of the thick and filthy smoke from the wicks. So Virg. Æn. v. 682, Stupa vomens tardum fumum.

The tow disgorging tardy, languid smoke.

182. Bearing violets.] They adorned their lamps with wreaths of violets, and other flowers, on these occasions.

182. Embraced

Cauda natat thynni, tumet alba fidebia vino;
 Labra moves tacitus, recutitaque sabbata palles:
 Tunc nigri lemures, ovoque pericula rupto:
 Hinc grandes Galli, & cum sistro lusca sacerdos,

185

182. Embraced a red dish.] Hypallage, for the dish embracing the tail of the fish. Thynnus, a large carse fish; the poet mentions only the tail of it, which was the worst part—this he does, probably, by way of derision of the Jews' festival-dinner.—The dish, of red earthen-ware.

183. Swims.—] In sauce.

— White pitcher.] An earthen vessel, a white crock of earth.

— Swells.] Is filled up to the brim—or tumet may imply, that the wine was bad, and in a fermenting state, frothing up above the brim.—Every circumstance of the entertainment seems to be mentioned with a thorough air of contempt, and to denote the poverty of the Jews.

184. Silent you move your lips.] You join in the solemnity, you attend at their profeuchæ, and, like them, mutter prayers inwardly, only moving your lips. See Sat. ii. l. 6.

— And fear.] Palles is used by our poet elsewhere to denote hard study, which occasions paleness. See Sat. i. l. 124; and Sat. iii. 85. Here it is used to denote that superstitious fear, which occasions, from yielding to it, a pale and wan appearance in the countenance.

— Circumcised sabbaths.] Recutita sabbata. Hypall. for sabbata recutitorum—the sabbaths of the circumcised. Palles sabbata, here, is equivalent to metuentem sabbata. Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 96.—q. d. By degrees you will enter into all the Jewish superstition.

The word sabbata, in the plural, may here denote, not only the sabbath-days, but all the Jewish holidays, which were days of rest from labour; among others, the festival which they had instituted in honour of Herod's birth-day.

185. Then black hobgoblins.] The mind enslaved by superstition, falls from one degree of it into another.

Lemures—ghosts, spirits that walk by night, hobgoblins. AINSW.—Nocturnos lemures. Hor. Ep. ii. Lib. ii. l. 209.—They are only supposed to appear by night—hence called black.

— Dangers from a broken egg.] The ancients had a superstition about egg-shells: they thought, that if an egg-shell were cracked, or had an hole bored through at the bottom of it, they were subject to the power of forcery.

This is contrary to the superstition of those, who, in the days when witches were believed in, always broke the bottom of an egg.

- " The tail of a tunny-fish swims, the white pitcher swells
 " with wine ;
 " Silent you move your lips, and fear circumcised sabbaths :
 " Then black hobgoblins, and dangers from a broken
 " egg : 185
 " Hence huge priests of Cybele, and a one-eyed priestess with
 " a sistrum,

egg-shell, and groined it, after having eaten the egg, lest some witch should make use of it in bewitching them, or sailing over the sea in it, if it were whole. See DAVENANT'S note.

For an instance of national superstition, as ridiculous as any that can be imagined, I would refer the reader to the solemn public statute of 1 Jac. I. c. 12. against witchcraft—now repealed by 9 Geo. II. c. 5.

186. Hence.] i. e. From this superstitious principle in the minds of men, they are led from one degree of credulity to another : of this advantage has been taken by the priests of Cybele, and of Isis, to fill them with groundless terrors.

— Huge priests of Cybele.] See these described at large, Juv. Sat. vi. 510—20. They were called Galli, from Gallus, a river of Phrygia, the drinking of which made people furious; So Ovid, Fast. iv.

Inter, ait, viridem Cybelem atque Celenas;

Amnis it insanâ nomine Gallus aquâ.

Qui hibet inde furit, &c.

Persius calls them grandes—Juvenal says, ingens semivir, &c.—They were usually of great stature, owing, as has been said, to their castration, which increased their bulk. Their strange, mad gestures, and their extraordinary appearance, as well as their loud and wild vociferation, had great effect on weak and superstitious minds. See Juv. Sat. vi. 521—25.

— One-eyed priestess with a sistrum.] The superstition of the Egyptian goddess Isis had been transferred to Rome, where she had a temple. She was represented with a sistrum, a sort of brazen or iron timbrel, with loose rings on the edges, in her hand. Σίστρον, from σείω, to shake—its noise proceeding from its being shaken violently, and struck with the hand, or with an iron rod.

The priestess of Isis, when celebrating the wild rites of Isis, carried a sistrum in her hand, in imitation of the goddess, and had great influence over the minds of the superstitious. See Juv. Sat. vi. 525—30.

The poet calls her one-eyed—perhaps this was her situation, and that she pretended to have lost an eye by a blow from the sistrum

Incussere deos instantes corpora, si non Prædictum, ter manè, caput gustaveris allî.

Dixeris hæc inter varicosos centuriones :
Continuò crassum ridet Vulfenius ingens, Et centum Græcos curto centussè licebit.

sistum of Isis ; for it seems that this was the way which the goddess took to avenge herself on those who offended her.

Decernat quodcunque volet de corpore nostro
Isis, & irato feriat mea lumina sistro.

Juv. Sat. xiii. l. 92—3. See the note there, on L. 93.

187. Have inculcated, &c.] These vile impostors, when once the mind is enslaved so far by superstition as to receive their impositions, will inculcate their absurd and wild notions as so many truths—they will persuade you, that the gods which they serve will send dropsies, and other swellings of the body, unless you use some amulet or charm to prevent it ; such as eating a head, or clove, of garlick, for three mornings successively.

188. Appointed.] i. e. Ordered—prescribed—as a preservative.

189. If you say these things, &c.] If you were to discourse, as I have done, in the hearing of one of our rough centurions (comp. Sat. iii. l. 77.) in order to prove the slavery of all men to vice and folly, except the wise, he would set up a loud horse-laugh at you.

—Veiny.] Varicosus, having large veins—perhaps from the robustness of his make.

190. Hæc

"Have inculcated gods inflating bodies, if you have not "Tasted, three times in the morning, an appointed head of "garlick.

"If you say these things among the veiny centurions,
 "Immediately huge Pulfenius rudely laughs, 190
 "And cheapens an hundred Greeks at a clipped centussis."

190. Huge Pulfenius.] The name of some remarkably tall and lusty soldier of that day—put here for any such sort of person.

— Rudely laughs.] Crassum ridet, for crasse ridet. Gracism.

191. And cheapens.] Liceor -eri. Dep. to cheapen a thing, to bid money for it, to offer the price.

— Greeks.] i. e. Philosophers, most of which first came from Greece.

— A clipped centussis.] Centussis, a rate of Roman money, amounting to about six shillings and three pence of our money.

— Clipped.] Curtailed, battered—short of its nominal value, like bad money among us.

q. d. If Pulfenius, the centurion, were to hear what I have said on the subject of liberty, he would not only laugh at it, but, if he were asked what he would give for an hundred philosophers, he would not offer a good six and threepenny piece for them all.—However, though you may be of the same mind, Dama, yet what I have said is not the less true, nor are philosophers the less valuable in the eyes of all the wise and good.

END OF THE FIFTH SATIRE.

S A T I R A VI.

A R G U M E N T.

Perſius addreſſes this epistolary Satire to his friend Cæſar Baſſus, a lyric poet. They both ſeem, as was uſual with the ſtudious among the Romans, in the beginning of winter, to have retired from Rome to their reſpective country-houſes; Perſius to his, at the port of Luna, in Liguria; Baſſus to his, in the territories of the Sabines.

The Poet firſt enquires after his friend's manner of life

AD CÆSIUM BASSUM.

ADMOVIT jam bruma foco te, Baſſe, Sabinø?
Jamnè lyra, & tetrico vivunt tibi peſtine chordæ?
Mire opifex, numeris, veterum primordia rerum,

1. Sabine fire-bearing.] The antient Sabines were a people between the Umbrians and Latins, but; after the rape of the Sabine women, incorporated into one people with the Latins, by agreement between Tatius and Romulus. This part of Italy ſtill retained its name: and here Baſſus had a country-houſe, to which he retired at the beginning of winter, for the more quiet and convenient opportunity of ſtudy. This was not far from Rome.

— Fire-bearing.] So focus literally ſignifies, quodd ſoveat ignem—ANSW. but it is ſometimes uſed for the whole houſe, by ſynec. and, perhaps, is ſo to be underſtood here. Sometimes, by meton. for the fire.

2. Does now the lyre.] The lyre was a ſtringed inſtrument, which gave a ſoft and gentle ſound when touched with fingers; but when ſtruck with a quill, which, when ſo uſed, was called peſtæ, gave a louder and harſher ſound.

The language here is figurative—the lyre ſtands for lyric, or the ſofter and gentler kind of poetry; and the ſtrings, or chords, being ſtruck tetrico peſtæ, with the rough or harſh quill, deand studies, then informs him of his own, and where he now is. He describes himself in his retirement, as quite undisturbed with regard to care or passions; and, with respect to his expences, neither profuse nor parsimonious. He then treats on the true use of riches; and shews the folly of those who live sordidly themselves; for the sake of leaving their riches to others.

TO CÆSIUS BASSUS.

HAS winter already moved thee, Bassus, to thy Sabine fire-hearth?

Does now the lyre, and do the strings, live to thee with a rough quill?

Admirable artist! in numbers the beginnings of things

note the sharper and severer style of verse. The poet enquires whether Bassus, in his retirement, was writing lyric verses, and whether he was also employing himself in graver or severer kinds of composition.

2. Live to thee.] When an instrument lies by, and is not played on, it may be said to be dead, and when taken up and played on, the strings may be said to be alive, from their motion and sound.

3. Admirable artist!] Opifex—lit. a workman:—it also means an inventor, deviser, and framer.

— In numbers.] i. e. In verses—in metre.

— The beginnings.] Primordia—the first beginnings—the history of the earliest beginnings of things. So Ovid, Met. Lib. 2. l. 3—4.

— Primæque ab origine mundi

Ad mea perpetuum deducite tempora carmen.

Atque marem strepitum fidis intendisse Latinæ;
 Mox juvenes agitare jocos; & pollice honesto,
 Egregios luisse senes!—Mihi nunc Ligus ora
 Intepet, hybernatque meum mare; quâ latus ingens
 Dant scopuli, & multa littus se valle receptat.
 ‘Lunæ portum, est operæ cognoscere, cives:’
 Cor jubet hoc Ennî; postquam destertuit esse

10

Some understand the poet to mean, that Bassus had written a treatise in verse, concerning the original beginning or rise of old and antiquated words, reading, after many copies, veterum primordia vocum—and that Bassus was not only a good poet, but a learned antiquary. But rerum affords the easiest and most natural sense—Malim igitur cum Causabono & aliis quibusdam, Θεωρημας & μυσικοποιας intelligere. See Delph. note.

4. Displayed.] Intendisse—lit. to have stretched.—The sound is given from instruments by the tension of the strings.

—Manly sound of the Latin lute.] i. e. To have written Latin lyric verses, in a noble, manly strain.

Among the Greeks they reckon nine famous lyric poets: But two among the Romans; viz. Horace and Caius Bassus. Horace calls himself—Romanæ fidei lyra. Ode iii. Lib. iv. l. 23.

To be reckoned this was his great ambition, as appears, Ode i. Lib. i. ad fin. where he says to Mæcenæ—

Quod si me lyricis vatibus inferes, Sublimi feriam sidera vertice.

5. Then to agitate young jokes.] Then, in light and lively strains, to describe the amours and frolics of young men.

—Honest thumb.] Meton. with truth and faithfulness, representing the actions and worthy deeds of older men, who have distinguished themselves in a more advanced time of life.

6. Ligurian.] i. e. Being now removed from Rome into Liguria.—Ligus ora, for Ligustica ora.

6—7. Coast grows warm.] Either from its situation near mountains, which kept off the cold blasts of wind, or from the circumstance next mentioned, the agitation of the sea, which causes a warmth in the water.

Tully, Nat. Deor. Lib. ii. says—“Seas agitated by the winds grow so warm, as easily to make us understand, that in those large bodies of water there is heat included: for that heat which we perceive, is not to be accounted merely external and adventitious, but excited by the agitation which is in the in—nermost

To have displayed, and the manly sound of the Latin lute.
Then to agitate young jokes, and with an honest thumb
To have played remarkable old-men. To me now the Ligurian coast

Grows warm, and my sea is rough, where a large side
The rocks give, and the shore draws itself in with much valley.

"The port of Luna it is worth while to know, O citizens:"
The heart of Ennius commands this, after he ceas'd dreaming that he was 10

"nermost parts of the water; this also happens to our bodies,
"when by motion they grow warm."

7. My sea is rough.] That is, the sea near Volaterra, a city of Tuscany, where Persius was born, and near which he now
was.

— Large side, &c.] The rocks running out far into the sea, present an extensive side to the water, by which the waves are stopped, and a quiet bay formed.

8. The shore draws itself in, &c.] The shore retires, and forms a large circular valley between the mountains; which is another reason of the warmth of my situation; my house, which is situate in that valley, being sheltered from the wintry storms.

9. Port of Luna.] So called from the shape of the bay which it was situate, which, from the circular form of the shore, was like an half-moon—Lunai, per diæresim, for Lunæ.

— It is worth while, &c.] This line is from Ennius, who began his annals of the Roman people with—

Est operæ pretium, O cives, cognoscere portum Lunæ.

10. The heart of Ennius, &c.] He was an ancient poet, born at Rudîæ, a town of Calabria: he wrote annals of the Roman people; also satires, comedies, and tragedies; but nothing of his is come to us entire. He died 169 years before Christ.

Cor means, literally, the heart; and, by meton. the mind, wisdom, judgment. Perhaps the poet means to say, that Ennius, when in his right mind and sober senses, recommended the port of Luna to his countrymen, after he came out of his vagaries after mentioned.

— Dreaming, &c.] See Prologue to Sat. i. l. 2, and note.
Mæonides was a name given to Homer, on account of his supposed birth at Smyrna, in the country of Mæonia, i. e. Lydia.

11. Fifth from the Pythagorean peacock.] Some are for supposing Quintus, here, to be understood as a phenomenon of Ennius:—but it should rather seem, as if Persius were here laughing at the extravagant idea of the Pythagorean doctrine of transmigration, which Ennius for a while had received, and who is said to have dreamt, that the soul of a peacock had transmigrated, first into Euphorbus, then into Homer, then into Pythagoras, and then into Ennius; so that he stood fifth from the peacock. See Dryden, Transf. and note on this place.

This is an evident banter on the Pythagorean notion of the Metempsychosis.

12. Hæc am I, &c.] In this comfortable retreat of the port of Luna, I trouble not my head about what people say of me.

— What the south, &c.] The south wind, when it blew with any long continuance, was reckoned very unwholesome, particularly to cattle. See Virg. Geor. i. l. 444.

Arboribusque, fastique, Notus, pecoribusq; sinister.

The poet seems to say, that he was without care or anxiety in his retreat. The modern Italians call this wind Shocco, or Sciocco, which blows from the south-east.

13. Thas cornu, &c.] Horace, Sat. vi. Lib. ii. l. 8—9.

— O si angulus ille

Proximus accedat, qui nunc denormat agellum.

Persius took his angulus ille from this passage of Horace.

14. And if all, &c.] If ever so many of my inferiors, however lowly and meanly born, should grow so rich, added ditcant, as to have their possessions exceed mine—

15. I should ever refuse, &c.] I should not make myself uneasy, so as to fret upon that account, and to bring an old age before my time, as if bowed under a weight of years.

16. Sup' without a washing.] Unctus, literally, is anointed, greasy, and applied to describe a dainty rich meal, good cheer. Hence unctitate oratio. See Answer. Unctus.

Mæonides, the fifth from the Pythagorean peacock.

Here [am] I, careless of the vulgar, and what the south, Unfortunate to the cattle, may prepare: and unconcerned because that corner

Is more fruitful than mine that's next to it: and if all, Sprung from worse, should grow ever so rich, I should always refuse, 15

On that account, to be diminish'd crooked with old age, or to sup without a dainty,

And to have touched with my nose the seal in the vapid cask.

Another may differ in these things; twins, O Horoscope, with a various

Genius you produce. There is, who, only on his birth-day,

I'll not live the worse; envy shall not spoil my appetite; I'll not abate a single dish at my table, in order to save up what would make me as rich as my neighbour.

17. And to have touched with my nose, &c.] I shall not bottle up dregs of musty wine, and then examine the seal, which I have put on the mouth of the vessel, as closely as if I meant to run my nose into the pitch which has received its impression, to try whether any of my servants have opened it.

q. d. I shall neither fret myself into old age before my time with envy, nor turn niggard, in order so save money, that I may equal my richer neighbours.

18. Another may differ, &c.] However such may be my way of thinking, yet as there are

Mille hominum species & rerum discolor usus—See Sat. v. 52.

it is certain that others may differ from me in sentiments, with regard to these matters.

— Q. Horoscope.] Horoscopus here signifies the star that had the ascendent, and presided at one's nativity.

q. d. Whatever astrologers may say, two persons, even twins, born under the same horoscope, are frequently seen to be produced with a different genius, or natural inclination.

19. There is, who, &c.] Of these twins, one of them shall be covetous and close, the other prodigal.

One of them will grudge himself almost the common comforts of life.

— On his birth-day.] This was usually observed as a time

Tingat olus siccum muria, vaser, in calice emptâ ; 20
 Ipse sacrum irrorans patinæ piper. Hic bona dente Grandia magnanimus peragit puer.—Utar ego, utar :
 Nec rhombos, ideò, libertis ponere lautus ;
 Nec tenuem solers turdarum nôsse salivam.

of feasting, and making entertainments for their friends. See Juv. Sat. xi. l. 83—5 ; and v. l. 36—7.

20. Wily.] Vaser.—cunning, crafty.

— Dip his dry herbs.] Olus -cris—any garden herbs for food—probably what we call a sallad.

Instead of pouring oil, or other good dressing, over the whole, he, in order to have no waste, craftily contrived to dress no more than he ate, by dipping the herbs, as he took them up to eat, into a small cup of pickle : of this he had no store by him, but bought a little for the occasion.

Muria was a kind of sauce, or pickle, made of the liquor of the tunny-fish—a very vile and cheap sauce.

21. Himself sprinkling, &c.] He would not trust this to a servant, for fear of his sprinkling too much, therefore did it himself.

— Sacred pepper.] Which he sets as much store by as if it were sacred.

Hor. Lib. i. Sat. i. l. 71—2.

Tanquam parcere sacris Cogeris.

And Lib. ii. Sat. iii. l. 110.

Metuensque velut contingere sacrum.

— This.] i. e. The other twin, quite of a contrary disposition.

— A magnanimous boy.] Yet not grown to manhood, but having early a noble disposition. Iron.

22. His tooth.] By the indulgence of his luxurious appetite—meton.—devours all he has.

— Dispatches a great estate.] i. e. Makes an end of a large estate, by spending it profusely upon his gluttony and luxury.

— I will use, &c.] For my part, says Persius, I will use what I have ; I say use, not abuse it, either by avarice on the one hand, or by prodigality on the other.

23. Not therefore splendid, &c.] Not so sumptuous and costly, as to treat my freedmen, when they come to see me, with turbot for dinner—ideò, i. e. merely because I would appear splendid.

24. Nec

Wily can dip his dry herbs in a cup with bought pickle, 20 Himself sprinkling on the dish sacred pepper. This a magnanimous boy

With his tooth dispatches a great estate.—I will use, I will use :

Not therefore splendid to put turbot to my freedmen,
Nor wise to know the small taste of thrushes.

Live up to your own harvest : and your granaries (it is right) 25

Grind out. What can you fear ?—Harrow—and another crop is in the blade.

24. Nor wise to know, &c.] Nor yet indulge myself in gluttony, or cultivate a fine delicate palate, so as to be able to distinguish the small difference between one thrush and another.

These birds, which we commonly translate thrushes, were in great repute as dainties. Some pretended to so nice a taste, as to be able to distinguish whether the bird he was eating was of the male or female kind, the juices of the latter being reckoned most relishing.

I will use what I have, says Persius, but then it shall be in a rational moderate way ; not running into needless extravagance, for fear of being reckoned covetous, or setting up for a connoisseur in eating, for fear of not being respected as a man of a delicate taste.

25. Your own harvest.] Equal your expences to your income.

26. Grind out.] Don't hoard, but live on what you have—use it all. Fas est—q. d. You may do it, and ought to do it.

— What can you fear ?] You have nothing to be afraid of: the next harvest will replace what you spend. Comp.
Matt. vi. 34.

— Harrow.] Occo is to harrow, to break the clods in a ploughed field, that the ground may lie even, and cover the grain. Here, by synec. it stands for all the operations of husbandry.—q. d. Plough, sow, harrow your land, and you may expect another crop.—Herba is the blade of any corn, which, when first it appears, is green, and looks like grass. "First the blade,
" then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." Mark iv. 28.

Persius was for Horace's auream mediocritatem (Ode x.
Lib. ii. l. 5—8.) neither for hoarding out of avarice, nor for exceeding out of profuseness.

' At vocat officium. Trabe rupta, Bruttia saxa
 ' Prendit amicus inops: remque omnem, surdaque vota,
 ' Condidit Ionio: jacet ipse in littore, & una

 ' Costa ratis laceræ.—Nunc, & de cespite vivo, Frange aliquid; largire inopi; ne pictus oberret
 Cæreleā in tabula. ' Sed cœnam funeris hæres

27. But duty calls.] Aye, says a miser, all this is very well; but I may be called upon to serve a friend, and how can I be prepared for this if I spend my whole annual income?

— With broken ship.] Methinks, says the miser, who is supposing a case of a distressed friend—methinks I see him shipwrecked, and cast away on the Bruttian rocks, and seizing hold on a point of the rock to save himself. See Æneid vi. 360.

Præsentemque uncis manibus capita aspera montis.

Brutium, or Bruttium, was a promontory of Italy, near Rhegium, hæd. Reggio, not far from Sicily, nigh to which there were dangerous rocks.

28. His unheard vows.] Surdus means, not only deaf, but also that which is not heard. It was usual for persons in distress at sea to make vows to some god, in order for their deliverance, that they would, if preserved, make such or such offerings on their arriving safe on shore. But, alai! the poor man's freight, and all the vows that he made, were all gone together to the bottom of the Ionian Sea.—The sea between Sicily and Crete was antiently so called.

30. The great gods from the stern.] The antients had large figures of deities, which were fixed at the stern of the ship, and were regarded as tutelar gods.—Aurato fulgebat Apolline puppis. Virg. Æn. x. 171.—The violence of the waves are supposed to have broken these off from the vessel, and thrown them on shore, whither also the man is supposed to have swum, and where he now lay.

— Sea-gulls.] Mergus is the name of several sea-birds, from their swimming and diving in the sea. AINSWORTH says it particularly means the cormorant.

The ribs of the ship were now torn open, and exposed to the birds of prey which haunted the sea, who might devour the dead bodies, or any provisions which were left on board.

31. The live turf, &c.] q. d. Now, upon such an occasion as this (which, however, is not so likely to happen to an individual of your acquaintance, as, in the prospect of it, to be a pretence for not freely and hospitably spending the whole annual produce of your land) you may relieve your ruined friend by a sale of part

" But duty calls. With broken ship, the Bruttian rocks of your land, supposing that you have none of the fruits of it left to help him with. Sell a piece of your land already sown, on which the blade is now springing up, and give the money to your friend who has lost his all ; that is, do not stay till you have reaped ; but help him immediately as his wants require.

Cespes is a turf, a sod, or clod of earth, with the grass or other produce, as corn, &c. growing upon it ; hence called vivus, living.

So Hor. Lib. i. Ode xix. l. 13.

Hic vivum mihi cespitem, &c.

And Lib. iii. Ode viii. l. 3—4.

—Positumque casbo in.

Cespitem vivo.

Comp. Juv. Sat. xii. l. 2.

Here cespitem vivo is to be understood of the land itself, with the corn growing upon it. The image is taken from the idea of a man's taking up a sod, breaking off a piece of it, and giving it to another.

32—3. Left painted, &c. See Sat. i. l. 89, note.

The table, or plank, on which the story of the distress was painted, represented the sea, and therefore appeared of a sea-green colour. Hence Persius says—Carulea tabula.

33. Your funeral supper, &c. Prolepsis.—Persius, who well knew the workings of avarice within the human mind, and how many excuses it would be making, in order to avoid the force of what he has been saying, here anticipates an objection, which might be made to what he last said, about selling part of one's estate, in order to relieve a ship-wrecked friend.

- ' Negliget, iratus quod rem curtaveris : urnæ
 ' Ossa inodora dabit : seu spirent cinnama surdum, 35
 ' Seu ceraso peccent Casiæ, nescire paratus.
 ' Tune bona incolumis minuas ?—Sed bestius urget
 ' Doctores Graios : ita fit, postquam sapere urbi,
 ' Cum pipere & palmis, venit nostrum hoc, maris experts,

But perhaps you will say, that if you sell part of your land, and thus diminish the inheritance, your heir will be offended, and resent his having less than he expected, by not affording you a decent funeral.

Horace says, Epist. ii. Lib. ii. l. 191—2.

—Nec metuum quid de me judicet hæres,
 Quod non plurā datis invenerat—

It was usual at the funerals of rich people, to make sumptuous entertainments, the splendour of which depended on the heir of the deceased, at whose expence they were given. These cœnæ ferales, or cœnæ funeris, were three-fold. 1. A banquet was put on the funeral pile, and burnt with the corpse. See Æneid vi. 222—5. 2. A grand supper was given to the friends and relations of the family. Cic. de leg. Lib. ii. 3. A dish of provisions was deposited at the sepulchre.

Ponitur exigua feralis cœna patellâ.

See Juv. Sat. v. l. 85, and note.

This last was supposed to appease their manes.

35. My unperfumed bones.] After the bodies of the rich were burnt on the funeral pile, the ashes containing their bones were usually gathered together, and put into an urn with sweet spices.

—Whether cinnamons, &c.] Persius here names cinnamon and Casia, the latter of which he supposes to be sophisticated, for the sake of cheapness, with cherry-gum, or gum from the cherry-tree. The cinnamon, if true and genuine, is a fine aromatic ; but the expression, spirent surdum, breathe insipidly—(surdum, Græcism, for surdè—or, perhaps, odorem may be understood)—looks as if the cinnamon, as well as the Casia, were supposed to be adulterated, and mixed with some ingredient which spoiled its odour. The heir is supposed to lay out as little as he well could on the deceased.

36. Prepared to be ignorant.] i. e. Determined beforehand not to trouble his head about the matter—the worse the spices, the less the cost.

37. Safe diminish, &c.] Therefore can you, while alive and well, having no sickness or loss of your own—all which are meant by incolumis—subtract from your estate, and thus disoblige your heir ?—Some suppose these to be the words of the heir,

“ Will neglect, angry that you have diminished your substance : “ To the urn
 “ He will give my unperfumed bones : whether cinnamons
 “ may breathe insipidly, 35
 “ Or Casias offend with cherry-gum, prepared to be ignorant.
 “ Safe can you diminish your goods ? ” — But Bestius urges
 The Grecian teachers : “ So it is, after to the city, “ With pepper and dates, came this our wisdom void of “ manliness,

heir, remonstrating against the old man's spending his money, and so diminishing the patrimony which he was to leave behind him : but I rather suppose the poet to be continuing the prolepsis which begins l. 33 ; and it is a natural question, which may be imagined to arise out of what the miser has been supposed to offer against being kind and generous to a distressed friend.—The poet before supposes him to urge his fear of disobliging his heir, if he diminished his estate.—Then, continues Persius, tunc bona incolumis minuas :—q. d. Can you then, on pain and peril of having your heir neglect your funeral, and shew the utmost contempt to your remains, think (while alive and well—incolumis—having no sickness, or loss of your own) of subtracting from your estate for the sake of other people ?—this you will urge as an unanswerable objection to what I propose you should do for the sake of an unfortunate friend—by this you plainly shew, that you are more concerned for what may happen to you after you are dead, than for your friends while you are alive.

37. But Bestius, &c.] The name of some covetous fellow, a legacy-hunter, who is represented very angry that philosophers have taught generosity, by which the sums which they expect may be lessened during the testator's life, and that from Greece has also been derived the custom of expensive funerals, which affect the estate after the testator's death.

37—8. Urges the Grecian teachers.] i. e. Rails, inveighs against the philosophers, who brought philosophy first from Greece, and taught a liberal bestowing of our goods on the necessities of others.

39. Pepper and dates, &c.] Pepper, dates, and philosophy, were all imported together from Asia. This is said in the same strain of contempt as Juvenal's Adventus Romam, quo pruna & coctona vento.

Sat. iii. l. 83.

39. This

39. This our wisdom.] Nostrom sapere, Gr. for nostra sapientia—like vivere triste, for tristis vita, Sat. i. l. 9.

— Void of manliness.] A poor effeminate thing, void of that noble plainness and hardness of our ancestors, who never thought of leading so lazy and indolent a life as the philosophers, or of laying out extravagant sums in spices, and burning aromatics on funeral piles, or putting costly spices into urns.

The poet uses marem strepitum for a strong manly sound, l. 4 of this Satire. This, among other senses given of this difficult phrase—maris experts—seems mostly adopted by commentators. But as Persius evidently applies the words—maris experts—from Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. viii. l. 15, it may perhaps be supposed that he meant they should be understood in a like sense.

Fundanius is giving Horace an account of a great entertainment which he had been at, and, among other particulars, mentions the wines:—

— Procedit fuscus Hydaspes

Cæcuba vina ferens; Alcon, Chium maris experts.

— “Black Hydaspes stalks.

“With right Cæcubian, and the wine of Greece—

“Of foreign growth which never cross’d the seas.”

FRANCIS.

To this Mr. Francis subjoins the following note.

“Chium, maris experts.] It was customary to mix sea-water “with the strong wines of Greece; but Fundanius, when he “says that the wine which Alcon carried had not a drop of water in it, would have us understand, that this wine had never “crossed the seas, and that it was an Italian wine, which Nasti- “dipus (the master of the feast) recommended for Chian.”

LAMP.

“This seems to be a good interpretation of Horace’s maris experts, and, therefore, as analagous thereto, we may understand it, in this passage, of Persius, in a like sense—to denote that the philosophy, which Bestius calls nostrom hoc sapere, “this “same wisdom of ours,” and which came from Greece originally, is now no longer to be looked upon as foreign, but as the growth of Italy, seeing that that, and the luxurious manners which came from the same quarter, have taken place of the antient simplicity and frugality of our forefathers.—“And so it “comes to pass (ita fit, l. 38.) that we are to give away our sub“stance

"The mowers have vitiated their puddings with thick

"stance to others, and that a vast expence is to attend our funerals, and that even a common rustic can't eat his pudding without a rich sauce."—But see Casaubon in loc.

40. The mowers, &c.] The common rustics have been corrupted with Grecian luxury, and now

The ploughmen truly could no longer eat,
Without rich oils to spoil their wholesome meat.

Bestius is very right in saying, that the philosophy which the Stoics taught at Rome came from Greece; but he would not have raised at the philosophers, if they had not taught principles entirely opposite to his selfishness and avarice; nor would he have found fault with the introduction of what made funerals expensive, had he not carried his thoughts of parsimony beyond the grave, and dreaded the expence he must be put to in burying those whom he expected to be heir to; and even the luxury which had been imported from Greece would not have troubled him, but as it cost money to gratify it.

— Their puddings.] Puls-tis—a kind of meat which the ancients used, made of meal, water, honey, or cheese and eggs; a sort of hasty-pudding—here put for any rustic, homely fare. The word vitiarunt well intimates the meaning of the selfish Bestius, which was to express his enmity to every thing that looked like expence.

41. Beyond your ashes.] Beyond the grave, as we say—Do you, miserable wretch, concern yourself about what your heir says of you, or in what manner your funeral is conducted?

— But thou, my heir, &c.] Persius, here, coincidently with the subject he is now entering upon, represents, in a supposed conversation in private with the person who might be his heir, the right a man has to spend his fortune as he pleases, without standing in awe of those who come after him: and first, to be liberal and munificent on all public occasions of rejoicing; next, to live handsomely and comfortably, and not starve himself that his successor may live in luxury.

42. Retired from the crowd.] Secretam garrir in aurem. Sat. v. l. 96.—Step aside a little, if you please, that I may deal the more freely with you, and listen to me.

43. "O good man."] q. d. Harkye, my good friend, and hear that is to be—

—Are you ignorant? Have not you heard the news?

—A laurel is sent, &c.] Caius Caligula affected to triumph over the Germans, whom he never conquered, as he did over the Britons; and sent letters to Rome, wrapt about with laurels, to the senate, and to the empress Cæsonia his wife.

45. The cold ashes, &c.] The ashes which were to be swept off the altars, were either those that were left there after the last sacrifice for victory, or might, perhaps, mean the ashes which were left on the altars since some former defeat of the Romans by the Germans; after which overthrow the altars had been neglected. DRYDEN.

—And now.] i. e. On the receipt of this good news.

—To the posts, arms.] Persius here enumerates the preparations for a triumph; such as fixing to the doors or columns of the temple the arms taken from the enemy. Thus Virg. Æn. vii. 183—6.

Multaque præterea sacris in postibus arma, Captivi pendent currus, curvæque secures,
 Et cristæ capitum, & portarum ingentia claustra,
 Spiculaque, clypeique, creptaque rostra carinis.

And Hor. Lib. iv. Ode xv. l. 6—8.

Et signa postes restituit Jovi,

 Postibus.

46. Garments of kings.] Chlamys signifies an habit worn by kings and other commanders in war.

—Ipse agmine Pallas

In medio, chlamyde, & pietis conspectus in armis.

Æn. viii. l. 587—8.

—Sorry mantles on the captives.] When captives were to be led in triumph, they put on them cloathing of the coarsest sort, made of a dark frize, in token of their abject state.

47. And chariots.] Effedum is a Gallic word—a sort of chaise

Belgica vel molli melius feret effeda collo.

VIRG. G. iii. l. 204.

The Belgæ were originally Germans, but, passing the Rhine, settled themselves in Gaul, of which they occupied what is now called the Netherlands.

47. Huge Germans.] Rhenos, so called because they inhabited the banks of the Rhine ; they were men of great stature.

— Cæsonia.] Wife to Caius Caligula, who afterwards, in the reign of Claudius, was proposed to be married to him, after he had executed the empress Messalina for adultery, but he would not have her. See her character—Ant. Univ. Hist. vol. xiv. p. 297.

She was a most lewd and abandoned woman. See Juv. Sat. vi. l. 613—16.

48. To the gods therefore.] By way of thanksgiving.

— The genius of the general.] Of the emperor Caligula—see Sat. ii. l. 3, note—who protected and prospered him.

— An hundred pair.] i. e. Of gladiators. These were beyond the purse of any private man to give ; therefore this must be looked upon as a threatening to his heir, that he would do as he pleased with his estate.

On public occasions of triumph, all manner of costly shews and games were exhibited, in honour of the gods, to whose auspices the victory was supposed to be owing ; also in honour of the conqueror ; therefore Persius adds—ob res egregiæ gestas.

49. I produce.] Induco signifies to introduce—to bring in—to bring forth, or produce. ANSW,

49. Who forbids?] Who puts a negative on my intention?

— Dare.] Will you, who are to be my heir, contradict this? do if you dare.

50. Woe! unless you connive.] Conniveo is to wink with the eyes. Met.—to wink at a matter, to take no notice, to make as if he did not see it.

Woe be to you, says Persius, if you offer to take notice, or to object to what I purpose doing on this occasion.

— Oil and pasties to the people.] Moreover I intend to bestow a dole upon the common people—popello (see Sat. iv. 15.)—in order to enable them to celebrate the victory.—Oil was a favourite sauce for their victuals. See l. 40, and note.

Artocrea (from artos, bread, and creas, flesh) a pie, or patty of flesh. ANSW.

51. Do you hinder?] Says he to his supposed heir; do you find fault with this bounty of mine, would you prevent it?

— Speak plainly.] Come, speak out.

— Your field hard by, &c.] Perhaps you will say, that my estate near Rome, though its vicinity to the city makes it the more valuable, yet is not fertile enough to afford all this.

Exossatus—cleared of the stones, called the bones of the earth, Ov. Met. i. 153. to which Persius perhaps alludes. Here it is supposed to mean cleared of the stones—i. e. cultivated to such a degree, as to be rich and fertile enough to produce what would be answerable to such an expence.

The above is the leading sense given by some of the best commentators to this difficult passage; but I cannot say that it satisfies me. I see no authority, from any thing that precedes or follows, to construe juxta—nigh the city, and hence make juxta equivalent to suburbanus: nor is the taking est from juxta, and transferring it to exossatus or ager, as done above, the natural method of the syntax.

I would therefore place the words in their natural order in which they are to be construed—Non adeo, inquis, juxta est exossatus ager. The Delph. interpret. says, Non ita; ais, prope est ager sine ossibus.

Exosso—are—is to take out the bones of an animal; to bone it, as we say.—Congrum istum maximum in aqua finito ludere pauper,

"Woe! unless you connive—Oil and patties to the lisper, ubi ego venero, exsultabitur. Ter. Adelph.—Ager is a field, land, ground—hence, a manor with the demesnes, an estate in land. Hence, by metaph. exsultatus ager may mean, here, an estate that has been weakened, diminished by extravagance or great expence, having what gave it its value and consequence taken out of it.

In this view I think we may suppose the poet as representing his heir's answer to be—"An estate that has been exhausted and weakened—exsultatus, boned as it were, by such expence as you propose, is not so near—non adeo juxta est—i. e. so near my heart, so much an object of my concern, as to make it worth my while to interfere about it, or attempt to hinder this last expence of your dose to the mob, when the first of the hundred pair of gladiators, l. 48, will bone it—i. e. diminish its substance and value, sufficiently to render me very unconcerned as to being your heir." We often use the word near, to express what concerns us.

This appears to me to be the most eligible construction of the words, as well as most naturally to introduce what follows.

52. Go to—] says Persius—very well, take your own way—think as you please, I am not in the least fear of finding an heir, though I should not have a relation left in the world.

53. My aunts.] Amita is the aunt by the father's side—the father's sister.

— Cousin-german.] Patruelis—a father's brother's son or daughter.

— Niece's daughter.] So proneptis signifies.

54. The aunt of my uncle.] Matertera—matris soror—an aunt by the mother's side.

— Lived barren.] Had no children.

55. Grandmother.] Avia, the wife of the avus, or grandfather.

Persius means, that if he had no relations, either near or distant, he should find an heir who would be glad of his estate.

55. I go to Bovillæ.] A town in the Appian Way, about eleven miles from Rome, so called from an ox which broke loose from an altar, and was there taken: it was near Aricia, a noted place for beggars, the highway being very public.

Dignus Aricinos qui mendicaret ad axes.

See Juv. Sat. iv. l. 117.

56. The hill of Virbius.] An hill about four miles from Rome; so called from Hippolytus, who was named Virbius, and worshipped there, on account of his living twice—inter viros bis. See Æn. vii. 761—77. This hill, too, was always filled with beggars, who took their stands by the road-side.

—Manius is ready, &c.] Manius is the name of some beggar, and so put for any; the first which he met with would immediately be glad to be his heir. Præstò—ready at hand.

57. An offspring of earth.—] What, says the other, would you take such a low base-born fellow as that, whose family nobody knows any thing about, a mere son of earth, to be your heir?

—Enquire of me, &c.] As for that, replies Persius, if you were to ask me who was my great grandfather’s father, who stood in the fourth degree from my father, I could not very readily inform you. But go a step higher, add one, and then add another, I could give you no account at all; I then must come to a son of earth, nobody knows who, but somebody that, like the rest of mankind, sprang from the earth.

Empedocles, and some other philosophers, held that mankind originally sprang from the earth.

59—60. By the course of kindred, &c.] Perhaps, in this way of reckoning, as the earth is our common mother, Manius may appear to be my relation, my great uncle for ought I know, or not very far from it; for as children of one common parent, we must be related.

61. You who are before, &c.] This line is allegorical, and alludes to a festival at Athens, instituted in honour of Vulcan, or of

"And to the hill of Virbius; Manius is ready at hand to

of Prometheus, where a race was run by young men with lighted torches in their hands, and they strove who could arrive first at the end of the race without extinguishing his torch. If the foremost in the race tired as he was running, he gave up the race, and delivered his torch to the second; the second, if he tired, delivered it to the third, and so on, till the race was over. The victory was his who carried the torch lighted to the end of the race.

Now, says Persius, to his presumptive heir, who appears to be more advanced in life, why do you, who are before me in the race of life, i. e. are older than I am, want what I have before the course is over, i. e. before I die, since, in the course of nature, the oldest may die first? I ought therefore to expect your estate instead of your expecting mine. It is the first in the torch-race that, if he fails, gives the torch to the second, not the second to the first. See Ans. Lampas, ad fin.

62. I am to thee Mercury.] Do not look on me as thy nearest kinsman, on thyself as my certain heir, and on my estate as what ought to come to you by right; but rather look on me as the god Mercury, who is the bestower of unlooked-for and fortuitous gain.

62—3. As he is painted.] Mercury, as the god of fortuitous gain, was painted with a bag of money in his hand. Hercules was the god of hidden treasures. See Sat. ii. l. 11, and note. Mercury presided over open gain and traffic, and all unexpected advantages arising therefrom.

63. Do you refuse?] Are not you willing to look upon me in

64. There is wanting something, &c.] But methinks you grumble, and find fault that a part of the estate has been spent.

—Diminished it for myself.] Well, suppose my estate be less than it was, I, that had the right so to do, spent the part of it that is gone upon myself and my own concerns.

65. But you have the whole, &c.] But you have all at my decease, whatever that all may be; you could have no right to any part while I was alive; so that you have no right to complain, when what I leave comes whole and entire to you.

—Avoid to ask, &c.] Don't offer to enquire what I have done with the legacy which my friend Tadius left me, or to bring me to an account concerning that, or any thing else.

66. Paternal sayings.] Nor think of laying down to me, as a rule, the lesson that old covetous fathers inculcate to their sons, whom they wish to make as sordid as themselves. Perhaps repone may here be rightly translated retort (comp. Juv. Sat. i. l. 1, and note)—q. d. Don't cast this in my teeth.

67. Let the gains of usury, &c.] q. d. “Put your money out

Persius, as if I were bound to live on the interest of what I have,

68. The residue!] says Persius, with indignation; since you can ask such a question, as if you meant to bind me down to leave you a certain sum, you shall have nothing, I'll spend away as fast as I can.

— Now, now more expensively, &c.] "Here," says Persius, "slave, bring more oil, pour it more profusely over my dish of pot-herbs. Now I see that your avarice leads you to be more concerned about what I am to leave, than you are about my comfort while I live, or for my friendship and regard, I'll e'en spend away faster than ever."

70. A nettle.] Shall I, even upon feast-days, when even the poor live better, content myself with having a nettle cooked for my dinner?—i. e. any vile worthless weed.

— And a smoky hog's cheek.] An old rusty hog's cheek, with an hole made in the ear by the string which passed through it to hang it up the chimney.

Sinciput—the fore-part, or perhaps one half of the head; also a hog's cheek. See Juv. Sat. xiii. l. 85, and note.

Here it is put for any vile and cheap eatable.

71. That that grandson of yours, &c.] That some of your descendants may hereafter live in riot, however sparing and covetous you may be.

— A goose's bowels.] The liver of a goose was esteemed by the Romans as a most delicious morsel. They crammed the animal with a certain food (of which figs were the main ingredient) cient) that made the liver grow to an amazing size. See Hor. Lib. ii. Sat. viii. l. 88; and Juv. Sat. v. l. 114.

72. His froward humour, &c.] When at the same time he is absurdly keeping an expensive and high-bred mistress.

73. A woof of a figure, &c.] Trama is the woof in weaving, which is composed of thin threads which lie parallel to each other, when shot through the warp. These do not appear while the cloth is fresh, and has the nap on; but when the cloth loses the nap, and becomes thread-bare, then the threads are seen, and have a poor, thin, and shabby appearance. Now, says Persius, shall I reduce myself to the appearance of the texture in an old, worn-out, thread-bare coat?—q. d. Shall I make myself a mere skeleton? mere skin and bone, as we say. Trama figuræ, for figura tramæ. Hypall.

74. A gluttonous belly, &c.] That he may have his gluttonous belly shake like a quag, as he walks along, with the fatness of his caul.

This is well opposed to the trama figuræ.

Popa is, properly, the priest who slew the sacrifices, and offered them up when slain: they had a portion of the sacrifices, on which they constantly feasted, and were usually fat and well-looking—hence popa signifies also gluttonous, greedy, dainty. Metaph.

75. Sell your life for gain.] Persius having pretty largely set forth how he should treat his supposed heir, who presumed to interfere with his manner of living, or with the disposal of his fortune while alive; and all this in answer to what the miser had said, on not daring to sell any part of his estate in order to relieve his shipwrecked friend, for fear his heir should resent it after his decease (see l. 33—7.) now concludes the Satire with some ironical advice to the miser, in which he shews that the demands of avarice are insatiable.

— Sell your life for gain.] If, after all I have said, you still persist in laying up riches, and hoarding for those who are to come after you, e’en take your course, and see what will be the end of it; or rather you will see no end of it, for neither you, 75—6. Search every side of the world.] Sail to every part of the world, that you may find new articles of merchandize.

76. Let not another exceed, &c.] Make yourself thorough master of the slave-trade, that you may know how to bring slaves to market, and to commend and set them off to the best advantage.—Plausisse—literally, to have clapped with the hand. It was customary for the Mangones, or those who dealt in slaves, to put them into a sort of cage, called catasta, in the forum, or market-place, where the buyers might see them: to whom the owners commended them for their health, strength, and fitness for the business for which they wanted them; also they clapped or slapped their bodies with their hands, to shew the hardness and firmness of their flesh. The slaves had fetters on; therefore the poet says—rigida catasta. They had arts to pamper them, to make them look sleek and fat; they also painted them to set them off, as to their complexion and countenance: hence the slave-dealers were called Mangones. See AINSW. Mango; and Juv. xi. l. 147.

77. Fat Cappadocians.] Cappadocia was a large country in the Lesser Asia, famous for horses, mules, and slaves. It has been before observed, that the slaves, when imported for sale, were pampered to make them appear sleek and fat—or perhaps we may understand, by pingues, here, that the Cappadocians were naturally more plump and lusty than others.

78. Double your estate.] i. e. By the interest which you make.

—I have done it.] That, says the miser, I have already done.

‘Jam decies redit in rugam. Depunge ubi fistam, ‘Inventus, Chrysispe, tui finitor acervi!’

8c

79. Ten times it returns into a fold.] i. e. It is now tenfold. Metaph. from garments, which, the fuller they are, the more folds they make: hence duplex, from duo, two, and plico, to fold—triplex, from tres and plico, &c. So the verbs, duplico, to double, to make twofold—triplico, &c. Ruga, Gr. ῥυτίς a Puō—i. e. Ἐγὼ traho, quod ruga cutim aut vestem in plicas contrahat. See AINSW.

79. Mark down, &c.] Depunge—metaph. from marking points on a balance, at which the needle, or beam, stopping, gave the exact weight. See Juv. Sat. v. l. 100, and note.

The miser, finding his desires increase as his riches increase, knows not where to stop—

Crescit amor nummi quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.

Juv. Sat. xiv. l. 139.

80. O Chrysispe, &c.] A Stoic philosopher, a disciple of Zeno, or, according to others, of Cleanthes. He was the inventor of the argument, or vicious syllogism, called sorites, from Gr. σωρῆς, an heap, it consisting of a great number of propositions heaped one upon the other, so that there was hardly any end to be found—A proper emblem of covetous desire, which is continually increasing.

Persius calls Chrysispe, inventus finitor, the only finisher, that was found, of his own heap—because he investigated the method of putting an end to the propositions, or questions, in that mode of argument, and wrote four books on the subject.

This the poet may be supposed to be deriding in this place, as in truth an impossible thing, Chrysispe himself having devised no better expedient, than to state only a certain number of propositions, and then to be silent.—But this would not do, he might be forced on, ad infinitum, by a question on what he said last. See Cic. Acad. Qu. Lib. ii. 29.

Marshall reads this line—

“Inventor, Chrysispe, tui, & finitor acervi.”

“Sic legas meo periculo, says he, sensu multo concinpiore.”

O Chrysispe! thou that couldst invent, and set bounds to thy increasing sorites, teach me to set bounds to my increasing avarice. Iron.—The miser is supposed to be wearied out with the insatiableness of his avaritious desires, and longs to see an end put to them—but in vain.

Having now finished my work, which, like the sorites of Chrysispe, has, from the variety and redundancy of the matter,

ter,

"Now ten times it returns into a fold; mark down where

"I shall stop,

"O Chrysis, the found finisher of your own heap." 80

ter, been so long increasing under my hands, much beyond what I at first expected, I should hope that the Reader, so far from blaming the length of the performance, will approve the particularity, and even minuteness, of the observations, which I have made on the preceding Satires of Juvenal and Persius, as on all hands they are allowed to be the most difficult of the Latin writers: therefore mere cursory remarks, here and there scattered on particular passages, would assist the Reader but little, in giving him a complete and consistent view of the whole; to this end every separate part should be explained, that it may be well understood and properly arranged within the mind: this, I trust, will stand as an apology for the length of these papers, which, wherever they may find their way, will be attended with the Editor's best wishes, that they may carry those solid and weighty instructions to the mind, which it is the business of our two Satirists to recommend—Delectando pariterque monendo.

However Persius may be deemed inferior to Juvenal as a poet, yet he is his equal as a moralist; and as to the honesty and sincerity with which he wrote—"There is a spirit of sincerity," says Mr. Dryden, "in all he says—in this he is equal to Juvenal, who was as honest and serious as Persius, and more he could not be."

I have observed, in several parts of the foregoing notes on Persius, his imitations of Horace—The reader may see the whole of these accurately collected, and observed upon—CASSAUB. Persiana Horatii Imitatio, at the end of his Commentaries on the Satires.

CORRECTIONS and ADDITIONS to VOL. II.

JUVENAL.

SAT. X.

L. 28, n. 2, l. 2, read Abdera.

L. 76, dele it—for that, r. this.

L. 91, r. chairs.

Add n. Chief chairs, &c.] Summas curules.—The poet speaks in the plural number, as each of the great officers of Rome had a chair of state, made of ivory, carved, and placed in a chariot—curru—in which they were wont to be carried to the senate; so the prætor had his sella curulis, in which he was carried to the forum, and there sat in judgment. See before, l. 35, n. N° 4. When an ædile was a person of senatorial dignity, he was called curulis, from the curule chair in which he was carried.

Summas curules, here, is used in a metonymical sense, like curule ebur, Hor. Lib. i. Epist. vi. l. 53—4. to denote the chief offices in the state, which had all been in the disposal of the once-prosperous Sejanus. See the last n. ad fin.

L. 107, add note—Indeed.] Prateus, in his Interpretatio in usum Delph. explains siquidem by enimverò, verily, truly, indeed—Marshall, by verò, which is much of the same import, and seems to mark a sarcastical contrast between the use of those noble animals by the warlike kings and generals of old time, and Domitian's getting them to Rome at a vast expence, for the empty gratification of his pride and ostentation.

SAT. XIII.

L. 4, r. should have overcome.

L. 13, add note—Tbo' you, &c.] The poet here reproves the impatience and anger of his friend, who, instead of apporportioning his grief to his loss, which was comparatively small, according to the preceding maxim (l. 11, 12.) shewed a violence of grief and resentment on the occasion, which bespake him unable to bear, in any measure as he ought, a light injury or misfortune.

L. 16, for this, r. these things.

L. 28, n. l. 4, r. Octogesimo.

L. 2. Now since.] The subject of the Satire is proposed, l. 1, though not entered upon till l. 7. The intermediate lines, beginning at Nam si, &c. l. 2, to the end of l. 6, are digressional, and humourously introduce the poet, now eighty years old, and forced into the service as a punishment, wishing to enter into the army with a lucky planet, as a soldier of fortune: the cheerfulness with which he appears to bear his misfortune, must have afforded no small disappointment to his enemies.—I have rendered the Nam si, as marking the transition to the poet's wish for himself. SAT. IV.

- L. 15. Caudam jactare, in this line, is by some interpreted by wagging the tail—metaph. alluding to dogs wagging the tail, when they seem to fawn and flatter, in order to ingratiate themselves with those whom they approach. Comp. Sat. i. 87, and note. This undoubtedly gives a very good sense to the passage, as descriptive of Nero's flatteries and blandishments towards the populace at Rome, in order to gain their favour. But I rather think that the interpretation which I have preferred (for both are to be found in commentators) is most agreeable to the preceding line—which seems to allude to the appearance which Nero made, when, to draw the eyes and affections of the people upon him, he exhibited himself in a triumphal robe at the Circensian games. See l. 14, note 1.

Casaubon concludes his note on l. 15, as giving a preference to the allusion which I have adopted—"Hoc autem re-nusit dictum à Persio—jactare se populo—Ut apud Juve-nalem,

"Ipse lacernatæ cum se jactaret amicæ. Juv. Sat. i. l. 62.

"Translatum a pavonibus, quando
